Island View Beach Residents Survey Flood Damage

Red Air Build-Up Feared by Allies

MUNSAN, Korea, Dec. 2 (Sunday) (AP). Allied truce negotiators today charged the Reds with seeking to build up their offensive air power in North Korea during an armistice if one is signed.

An Allied spokesman said Vice-Admiral C. Turner Joy, senior U.N. command delegate, told the Reds "of course, we will never agree to a thing like that."

The spokesman, Brig.-Gen. William P. Nuckols, said the Reds "insist upon no replenishment of supplies and no rotation or replacement of (Allied) troops now in Korea."

The Sunday morning session ended with agreement only to meet again late today.

During the morning meeting, North Korean Major-Gen. Nam Il declared "Korea has every right to reconstruct and reinforce during an armistice, including the construction of airfields. The Korean people intend to construct airfields during the armistice."

He made this clear after Joy repeated that the Allied command sought no restrictions on construction other than airfields.

In air fighting, Communist jets shot down four Allied warplanes Saturday in one of the first Red victories of the Korean air war.

Fifth Air Force headquarters said the swept-back MIG-15s destroyed three Australian Meteor jets and one American F-80 Shooting Star. The Meteors shot down two MIG's and damaged three others.

It was the first time the Reds have shot down as many as four Allied planes in one day. It came just a day after the U.N.'s biggest air victory of the war: 11 Red planes shot down, one probably destroyed and three damaged.

The Australian planes, twin jets from Britain, are early model jets, roughly comparable to the American Shooting Star. Both are slower than the MIG's.

The ground war remained quiet.

U.S. Message Hands Reds Keys to Code

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1 (INS)—Army spokesmen conceded today that a cable to Washington giving the exact location of the cease-fire line in Korea may have enabled the Communists to crack a top-secret military code.

This came to light when Pentagon officials refused to give newsmen details on the cease-fire line on grounds that it had been sent by code and therefore would provide Red intelligence a key to cracking it.

It was pointed out that the Communists already know the exact location of the line from their own truce negotiators. The army spokesman conceded it is very likely that the coded message was intercepted by the Reds.

He admitted that under these circumstances, the Communists have had ample opportunity to break the code.

Newsmen were shown a cease-fire line on a map which eliminated small zigs and zags in an effort to maintain secrecy.

Army public information officers said military intelligence insisted that every precaution be taken against releasing the exact co-ordinates. They gave no other reason except fear of the code being compromised.

The officials had no explanation of why the co-ordinates were sent in code in the first place and labeled secret even though the Communists already knew them.

N.A.T.O. Request for Troops Reported Rejected by Canada

By TOM GREEN
Colonist Ottawa Correspondent

OTTAWA, Dec. 1—High government sources said tonight a N.A.T.O. bid for additional Canadian troops for General Eisenhower's European army has been rejected for the present by Canada.

The suggestion was raised at the Rome meeting attended by External Affairs Minister Pearson, Finance Minister Abbott and Defense Minister Brooke Claxton during the past week.

Canada plans to sit tight on the contribution of the 27th Infantry Brigade now assembled at Hanover, Germany, plus the 11-squadron air division to be formed by the end of 1953. The 27th Brigade will consist of about 5,500 men in Europe plus reserves which will be stationed in Canada.

The N.A.T.O. suggestion was for a complete Canadian division roughly 14,000 to 15,000 men. Canada's answer was that so long as another brigade group, the 25th, is in Korea, it would not be possible under existing circumstances to boost this country's manpower contribution.

The question of compulsory or selective service was raised and also rejected by the Canadian representatives.

It is likely that Canada's monetary and equipment contribution to N.A.T.O. will be increased instead.

Big Four Representatives "Cordial" at First Talks

PARIS, Dec. 1 (AP)—Smiling and unusually cordial, high level delegates of the Big Four powers today started secret talks intended to develop some agreement on rival east-west disarmament plans.

They met for an hour with the president of the United Nations General Assembly, Luis Padilla Nervo of Mexico, who is to preside in all the discussions. The session, held in Padilla Nervo's office, concerned procedure only. The group agreed to get down to business Monday.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky was the highest ranking official of the Big Four present. U.S. Ambassador Philip C. Jessup, British Minister of State Selwyn Lloyd and French delegate Jules Moch represented the western powers.

Padilla Nervo said the atmosphere was so cordial he considered it a good omen. He announced the group agreed on every single point he raised about the work on which a report must be made to the U.N. political committee by Dec. 10. He did not explain what points he raised but it was understood they concerned only to tackle the monumental job.

Technically the group is a subcommittee of the political committee. The political committee set it up by unanimous vote Friday after two weeks of dragging debate and sharp east-west clashes.

Cougars' Check for $100 Boosts Cigarette Fund

Sparked by a $100 check from the Victoria Hockey Club, The Colonist Cigarette Fund yesterday ended its fourth and biggest day with contributions now totaling $345.80. Total amount donated yesterday was $135.50.

The contribution from the Cougars was the second of that size since the campaign opened last Wednesday. An anonymous man sent in a $100 check Thursday.

The fund as it stands now represents nearly 70,000 cigarettes which will be sent along to Canadian soldiers in Korea.

Now that the fund is rolling, officials are optimistic that yesterday's total contributions will be surpassed and surpassed again.

Money has rolled in in all amounts, from pennies collected at schools to checks from large organizations, to both the downtown and uptown offices of The Colonist. Fund officials ask nothing more than that citizens here keep up the good work.

Cause for shame was disclosed yesterday in a letter from registered nurse Marie-Louise Weldon of Quesnel who told The Colonist that the deer was loaded onto the top of the hunters' black English sedan.

She further claimed that the trio found the deer "cleaned and conveniently close to the McLeese Lake road," and that on Nov. 25 they tagged it as their own and loaded it on their car.

The irate Cariboo nurse said that "thefts of this kind are occurring more frequently all the time but it's not often they are witnessed."

"Have they [illegible] their hunting story? I should like to hear it," concluded Miss Weldon, adding:

"After all, I shot the deer!"

P.C. Breach Widened Local Delegate Reports

Federal and provincial Progressive-Conservatives went behind locked doors at yesterday's annual convention of the B.C. Progressive-Conservative Association in Vancouver to have a family quarrel.

Provincial leader Herbert Anscomb shortly after the convention opened at 9:30 a.m. told the delegates "There seems to be some divergence of opinion in the party."

He moved the convention should continue in camera and the press was asked to leave.

Bone of contention was between Anscomb and federal leader George Drew over direct control of federal affairs in B.C.

It was reported by a Victoria delegate that Col. Drew said he wanted a direct liaison officer for federal matters in British Columbia, and named Col. Cecil Merritt, V.C., former M.P. for Vancouver-Burrard, as his B.C. officer.

ALLABOARD

By G. E. Mortimore

Villains have a pathos of their own. Tragedy touches the feelings on the raw because its central characters are at the same time so human, so blameworthy and so innocent.

The sight of anti-social characters brought low can make you weep if you also see how they felt. Hitler looks all black from this distance, but Shakespeare could certainly have drawn him in a shade of grey, or perhaps in a black and white checker pattern.

There was something a little touching in a recent news story about a bank robber who was caught making a humble livelihood by hooking rugs. Perhaps he would have been content to hook rugs for the rest of his life. Who knows?

As it is with human villains, so with animal villains —and vegetable villains too, I suppose. Admittedly I have never seen a Venus fly-trap in distress. If I did I might bend down to pat its little head. But let us descend from the ridiculous to the absurd.

* * *

According to one of those anecdotes of childhood which mothers love to tell despite the protests of their victims, I once showed an almost maudlin degree of sympathy for a python.

The story, which I have heard so often that I am beginning to believe it myself, says that a gang of natives were carrying the large and nasty snake either trussed up or dead through the streets of Tanga in East Africa. I looked at the snake and pronounced these deathless words:

"Poor little insect."

Few creatures seem more remote from the human than a reptile, and especially a lethal reptile. And yet in my brattish way I may have seen a glimpse of the truth. The beast couldn't help being a python. It may even have tried to be a good python. So why not feel sorry for it, once you have made sure it will never wrap itself around you and squeeze you to a jelly?

Perhaps the elements of true tragedy were lacking there. No tragic flaw in the python's character brought it into the net, and if there had been a tragic flaw I would scarcely have seen it. I could not be expected to understand the distinction between pathos and tragedy at such an early age. I am not sure that I understand it now.

* * *

Lately I have heard another story about a reptile villain which seems to me pathetic, at least.

Ben Robert Maggs, the S.P.C.A. inspector for Victoria, was working in a zoo down south. He got a call to go to Tijuana, Mexico, and classify a strange lizard which someone had found.

"Come in," said the rancher when Mr. Maggs reached the place. "The lizard is under the stove. He's been playing in the kitchen all morning."

Mr. Maggs made his way past a number of children to the kitchen stove, and looked underneath.

Then his hair stood on end. The lizard was a live Gila monster some 20 inches long—a deadly poisonous reptile whose bite can sometimes kill a man in a minute.

He gave warning. The rancher, who had received the reptile guest with such hospitality, ran out and slammed the door. Mr. Maggs shot the Gila monster dead with a revolver.

Although you couldn't find a man more tender-hearted toward animals than Maggs, he did the only possible thing there. But the Gila monster had been "playing in the kitchen all morning." It was a playful Gila monster. I can't help feeling sad about that.

Police Busy With Mishaps

A wave of traffic accidents kept city police on the run throughout most of yesterday.

At 10 a.m., a car driven by Maurice Richard Williams, 1146 Wende Road, was in collision with one driven by Charles Sidney McIntyre, 68, of 3329 Lilwood. McIntyre received slight cuts and bruises about the head.

A car driven north along Government by Doris Webb, 3890 Cadboro Bay Road, was in collision with the rear of another driven by John Osadchuck, 545 Hillside, at 11.50 a.m. on Government between Yates and Johnson.

At 12.05 p.m. Mrs. Stanley Watkins, 2870 Ashby, was in collision with the rear of a car while she was crossing Broad and Johnson in the pedestrian lane. She received a bruise to her right leg.

TURNED OVER

A car driven by John James Harris, 710 St. Patrick, was turned over and ended up on the lawn of Bruce Passmore, 1960 Fairfield, after a collision with a car driven by Joseph McIlveen, 873 Oliver. Mr. Harris was taken to Royal Jubilee Hospital with shock and back injuries.

At 3.05 p.m. Sharon Beswick, 8, of Dencross Crescent, Saanichton, was in collision with a car driven by Andrew Ustick, 535 Hillside, at the intersection of Government and Pandora. She was taken to hospital with bruises.

A car driven by Andrew J. Smith, 545 Atkins Road, was in collision with the automobile of P. A. Fitzsimmons, 3608 Douglas, at 3.30 p.m. on Cormorant between Douglas and Pandora.

At 7.45 p.m. cars driven by Ronald F. Simmons, 873 Vernon, and Clarence Budyniski, 56 Cadillac, were in collision on Douglas. Slight damage was caused to both cars.

At 11.50 p.m. a taxi driven by A. Crawford, 3071 Orillia, was in collision with the car of Robert Bowman, 1371 Buchan Street, Duncan.

P.C. Breach Reported Widened

It was reported that Col. Drew was anxious to patch things up, but Mr. Anscomb refused to compromise, and no common ground could be found.

The convention passed a motion that all matters pertaining to the party in British Columbia should be cleared through executive of the B.C. association.

An amendment that all matters [illegible] was defeated. Opponents said it conflicted with Col. Drew's position in appointing Col. Merritt.

HOPES BLASTED

General feeling after the secret session, which ended about 5 p.m., was that the bickering had further blasted hopes of cementing party unity.

Regular agenda was taken up and kept delegates in session until nearly midnight.

Maj.-Gen. George Pearkes, M.P., president of the B.C. association, is in Paris. Vice-president Davie Fulton, Kamloops M.P., was chairman of the convention.

Col. Drew, in his opening address, told delegates that the party should name its next federal candidates now.

"We have a better chance with the second or even the third best if we name him now than if we waited until two weeks before the election and named the best candidate that was ever born," he said.

"Politics is not just a game," the national leader said. "The survival of democracy itself depends on strong political parties.

GET INTO GAME

"If democracy is going to survive, the people have to get out of the political bleachers and into the game. We have the right and the duty to ask people to join in the processes of democracy, and if they don't they have no right to complain afterwards if things are not done to their liking."

The convention decided to hold a special meeting early next year to consider a new constitution.

It was to have been considered yesterday but the federal-provincial feud crowded it off the agenda.

Maj.-Gen. Pearkes was re-elected association president.

Other new officers are: Leigh Stevenson, Vancouver, first vice-president; W. H. Haldane, Victoria, second vice-president; Mrs. J. T. Auld, Vancouver, third vice-president; H. A. Truswell, Kelowna, fourth vice-president; George Ogston, Vanderhoof, fifth vice-president; Mrs. E. G. Woodward, Saanichton, sixth vice-president; A. M. Harper, Vancouver, treasurer; [illegible] McDonald, Vancouver, secretary.

Force by Summer Aim Of New Defense Plan

—EUROPE TODAY—

By KINGSBURY SMITH

PARIS, Dec. 1 (INS).—A new Eisenhower stop-gap plan for the defense of western Europe in 1952 is taking shape.

The new plan calls for creation of a combat-ready Allied force of 30 to 35 divisions by the summer of next year.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, supreme commander of Allied forces in Europe, has told America's European allies he believes such a force, supported by atomic air power, would stand a reasonable chance of checking any Soviet military attempt to conquer western Europe.

He has further expressed the belief that it would discourage Russia from risking war with the West.

Authoritative sources say the Eisenhower plan has been approved by President Truman and the so-called Anglo-American-French military "standing group" in Washington, top level Western Allied strategy body.

The plan has also been ratified by the 12 chiefs of staff of the Atlantic Pact Organization. It is now being considered by the European Allied governments whose approval is expected by the time the next meeting of the Atlantic Council is held in January.

In order to help arm the European divisions which would form the bulk of this pocket-size but hard-hitting army, U.S. military planners are considering limiting the equipment of America's home defense forces next year from combat readiness to training level.

Tanks, guns and other weapons formerly earmarked for American National Guard and other home units would be sent to the European Allied divisions.

One of America's top officials told this correspondent that, in his opinion, it was better to have a combat-ready Allied army in existence in western Europe next year than to have American home defense forces fully equipped.

ARMED ON ARRIVAL

This official pointed out that during the last war hardly a single American division arrived in Europe fully equipped for combat. The equipment was made available when the U.S. divisions reached the European theatre of operations.

Gen. Eisenhower's plan is much less ambitious than the Atlantic Pact defense program adopted in Brussels last December. This program called for an Atlantic army of 60 divisions by July, 1954.

It went aground because the European Allied governments said they were unable to meet their commitments under it. Numerous reasons were given. They included the increased cost and scarcity of raw materials caused by the Korean conflict, the inability of the American government to maintain scheduled shipments of military equipment to the European Allies because of Korea and the general reluctance of the European Allies to lower living standards of their people to the extent necessary to meet the original commitments.

American policy-makers refuse to admit that the European Allies have been relieved of commitments under the Brussels program. They maintain that they still hope it will be possible to form the 60-division army by 1954, but that in the meantime attention will be concentrated on the Eisenhower plan for a combat-ready force in 1952.

European Allied officials assert the Brussels program has been shelved; that they are no longer bound by those long-range commitments.

A $64 question which top American officials are reticent about these days is whether the Eisenhower plan will enable Allied grand military strategy in Europe to be based on an effective continental defense or whether it will be necessary to fall back on the so-called "island strategy."

The latter is based on the theory that it would be impossible to hold Western Europe for any length of time in the event of a sudden Soviet attack. The island strategy calls for the use of the British Isles, Spain and North Africa as major bases for Allied operations under such circumstances.

WANTED 60 DIVISIONS

At the time of the Brussels conference, Allied military planners told newsmen that the 60-division army program they had formulated represented, in their opinion, the minimum essential for a continental defense; that is, to hold a line on the Rhine or the Elbe Rivers.

Now S.H.A.P.E. is concentrating its attention on the Eisenhower plan for 30 or 35 divisions.

Sources close to Gen. Eisenhower state he is perfectly sincere in the belief that a fully-equipped, well-trained combat-ready army of 30 or 35 divisions should be able to check a Soviet attack against western Europe.

These sources said his plan is based on the assumption that the immediate threat to western Europe would be the Russian forces concentrated in eastern Europe, and especially the Soviet zone of Germany. These are estimated to total around 100 divisions.

The Eisenhower plan envisages the Atlantic pocket-size army disorganizing the initial offensive of these Soviet forces while Allied bombers cut them off from their supply lines by creation of a radioactive no-man's land behind them through atomic bombing.

USE ATOMIC BOMBS

With the Soviet advance force cut off from the rear and "chewed" at in the front by the Atlantic army, Gen. Eisenhower thinks it should be possible to annihilate them through the use of tactical atomic bombs dropped in their midst.

There is no doubt in the minds of Gen. Eisenhower's associates that he would prefer to have a stronger force than 30 or 35 divisions to defend western Europe.

However, it is felt that he had no alternative but to concentrate on this smaller force in view of the fact that the original program was proving beyond the political and economic capabilities of the European allies.

Gen. Eisenhower, according to his friends, had to decide on creating a smaller, combat-ready force next year or be confronted with the virtual failure of his mission in Europe.

He is known to be determined that the latter should not be the case. Apart from any other consideration, it would not help him if he should decide to run for President next year.

As he said to a recent visitor particularly interested in his political intentions: "If I fail during the next six weeks, I won't be worth anything to anybody."

LETHBRIDGE, Alta., Dec. 1 (CP).—A four-year-old tot showed up with 820 pocket library books at a collection today. The books will be shipped to the R.C.A.F. 401 Squadron stationed in England.

Finley, shelling out the fine, agreed it might be a good idea.

Korean Guerrillas Force Martial Law

EIGHTH ARMY H.Q., Korea, Dec. 1 (INS).—Martial law was clamped down on South Korea by the Republic of Korea government today in an effort to combat guerrillas in the southwest.

The guerrillas control much of the rugged mountainous area at [illegible] insula.

The story of the guerrillas was released today for the first time since early in the war. Previously, reports on guerrilla activity have been held up by censors on the grounds that they gave "aid and comfort to the enemy."

The mountains overlook the "ricebowl of Korea." The guerrillas work under Communist direction but are believed to be mostly bandits rather than confirmed Communists. They are armed with rifles, machine-guns and other light weapons.

Although not numerous the guerrillas have been active. They have raided Allied main supply lines, taking potshots at trains and vehicles. Civilians have been kidnapped and villages plundered.

In one broad area, the guerrillas have completely usurped local police power.

They cut telephone lines nightly and make it virtually impossible to maintain effective communications in the area.

Last winter, augmented by stranded troops of the North Korean army, their number was estimated to be 80,000.

However, effective action by R.O.K. troops during the spring eliminated most of the guerrilla force.

Canada's Seaway Plans To Be Outlined in Detail

OTTAWA, Dec. 2 (CP).—The details of Canada's plans to go ahead alone with the St. Lawrence seaway will be made known to parliament early this week.

Transport Minister Chevrier is expected to detail the government's seaway policies Tuesday when he moves Commons legislation setting up a government agency to handle the job.

Mr. Chevrier's statement will follow the formal signing of an agreement between the federal government and the government of Ontario on arrangements authorizing Ontario to proceed with the development of power in the St. Lawrence. This is an integral part of the over-all St. Lawrence project.

Canada already has indicated intention to build the seaway without co-operation from the United States, whose Congress has cold-shouldered the project for years, and Trade Minister Howe indicated last week that Canada might be putting a deadline on any eventual U.S. participation.

Addressing a meeting of engineers in Washington last Wednesday, Mr. Howe said:

"There is no lack of desire on the part of Canada to proceed with the joint project, and the door will be left open to participation by the United States, should there be ratification of the 1941 agreement early in the year 1952."

Slick License Trick Works Fine---$1,000

NEW YORK, Dec. 1 (AP).—It looked to Stanley Goldman like a sure-fire way to beat New York traffic laws. He put Florida license plates on his car.

The idea apparently was that nobody is going to worry much about a traffic fine when the violator presumably has gone back to Florida.

Goldman, 25, said he got the idea from a business associate, Stanley Lambert of Miami, Fla.

He also got his Florida plates in Lambert's name, he added.

Everything worked fine as Goldman accumulated 46 tickets in less than a year.

He never bothered to pay one.

But police were getting pretty familiar with the Florida license number.

Today Goldman was arrested for double parking.

A quick check and another officer showed up in court with the 46 other tickets.

Chief magistrate John M. Murtagh told Goldman:

"You have violated the law repeatedly. Anyone showing such willful disregard of the law should serve time."

Murtagh then revoked Goldman's driver's license, fined him $1,000 and sent him to jail for 60 days.

Museum May Exhibit Toys from World Over

LONDON, Dec. 1 (Reuters).—London may have a new museum—one which will contain old and new toys from all parts of the world.

Members of the toy trade, discussing the idea, said exhibits will include toys once used by famous persons, as well as toys from overseas countries.

Meyer Back in Prison After Disputed Leave

BONN, Germany, Dec. 2 (CP).—Gen. Kurt Meyer, whose temporary release from war crimes prison was the subject of debate in the Canadian House of Commons last week, returned to prison today.

Meyer, Hitler's youngest general during the Second World [illegible] passionate leave Saturday.

He was given temporary freedom to visit his wife and five children whom he had last seen in 1945. After spending the 10 days at his home in Offleben he returned to the British military prison at Werl to resume his life sentence.

At the end of the Second World War Meyer was sentenced by a Canadian court as a war criminal. He was found responsible for the killing of 18 Canadian prisoners of war by his men in Normandy in 1944.

He was first sentenced to death, but later it was commuted to life. He was confined at Dorchester, N.B., until earlier this year, when he was transferred to Germany to continue his sentence.

The fact that he had been given compassionate leave first came to light last week when Douglas How, Canadian Press correspondent, went to Meyer's home to interview his wife and discovered the general there, playing with his children.

The subject of Meyer's release was later raised in parliament by George Drew, leader of the Opposition, who demanded an explanation. When it was learned that Meyer had been released without the knowledge of the Canadian government, there were protests and demands that Meyer be returned to Canada.

Defense Boss Extends Talks

KEY WEST, Fla., Dec. 1 (AP).—Defense mobilizer Charles Wilson came here today for afternoon talks with President Truman on the controversial matter of how arms program is faring and decided to extend his stay until tomorrow.

The rate of rearmament progress has been criticized in Congress and upheld at the Pentagon in Washington. There was no explanation of the extension of the Truman-Wilson conferences.

Wilson predicted in Washington Friday that the United States will reach the peak of its military production in 1953.

The Ideal of Service

THE progress of industry on this continent, and its advance from a pioneer start to the most highly developed productive capacity that the world has known, was founded on two energizing factors—technical ability and a genuine desire to serve. These two qualities harnessed to capital-in-action and skilled labor, and assisted by abundant and diversified natural resources, proved to be the drive that was necessary to conquer a wilderness and to make it yield rich benefits for the common weal of mankind. It would be a great pity if the more powerful of these two prime factors were ever to be lost sight of because it is the desire to serve, the genuine wish to be of benefit to mankind, that is the taproot of real progress.

An Edison working alone in his laboratory, a Ford tinkering in his backyard shed, a Marconi with a desire to test the theory of scientists and make one thing work, and many others like them, were impregnated with the ideal of service. If acclaim, wealth and honors came to them as a result of their labors, that is not what they set out to seek. Similarly, the ideal of service has built, and for long can continue to create, whole industries geared to some product inherently useful to mankind. Of late, perhaps due to the strains and stresses of inflationary times, too much has been heard about the mechanics of industry and too little about its primary function, service. Yet the two are inseparable, and service is the prime mover, the living and continuing medium of growth.

It is a fallacy to think that in a material and very real sense man is not pioneering still. Indeed, seldom if ever before has so much absolute knowledge been revealed, unlocking a thousand doors to new avenues of human progress. It is the spirit in which these new corridors are trod, however, that will determine the actual benefits that will accrue to mankind. Soon as all positions are held in trust, and all men are of importance in the shaping of the circumstances of tomorrow. If the ideal of service is kept uppermost in that we shall have no need to fear for the outcome of the second half of the Twentieth Century. The opportunities were never greater. The need, as always, is for men big enough to measure up to their times.

The Late Mr. H. J. J. Sargint

WHEN Mr. H. J. J. Sargint appended the newspaperman's "30" to the article which appears elsewhere on this page he laid down his pen forever. In his 70th year, Mr. Sargint, whose name has been familiar to readers of the Colonist for more years than we can reckon, died suddenly at his home in London within hours of completing what was to be his last review of the passing scene in the British Isles.

Mr. Sargint was born on the island of Zante in the Ionian Islands, where his family had held British consulship from 1750 until early in the present century. He was educated in Switzerland and later at Bedford School and King's College, London. During the First World War he joined Reuters News Service, and rose to the position of editor in charge of the London office. Early in 1920 he went to Paris as Reuters' chief correspondent there, and returned to London the following year to resume his managerial post.

For the past quarter-century Mr. Sargint had been European editor and manager for North American Newspaper Alliance, and for many years had been a member of the Foreign Press Association, of which he was a vice-president, and of the executive committee of the Association of American Correspondents in London.

The breadth of his experience and his close acquaintance with political figures of this and earlier days lent authority to Mr. Sargint's calm and reasoned writings on problems and events across the Atlantic. In his death we feel the loss of a distinguished and scholarly contributor—one who, by his portrayal of the British people, their politics, institutions and traditions, for several United States newspapers, did much to foster American understanding of the United Kingdom and its way of life.

Who, Perchance, Is the Pipsqueak?

EVEN when enthused about their government leader politicians should guard against being intoxicated, as Disraeli so aptly put it, by the exuberance of their own verbosity. Page Mr. Straith, who the other day let his tongue run away with him to the extent of condemning as "pipsqueaks" all who dared to criticize the Coalition regime.

Pipsqueak is a slang term meaning insignificant or contemptible, the full force of which Mr. Straith may or may not have had in mind. When applied to all who differ from the cabinet of which he is a member, however, he invites a retort in kind. He is decrying the very people who put him and his colleagues in office, and in a way that scarcely could be more uncomplimentary.

Premier Johnson may deserve the eulogies voiced by Mr. Straith, and undoubtedly he has been untiring in his efforts to attract industry to this province on a large scale, but that does not absolve him or any of his administration from criticism, be it good or bad. The education minister's attitude, in fact, helps to confirm the impression of arrogance that so annoys British Columbia and which has been a primary cause of the unpopularity of the Coalition regime.

Indeed, if the word "pipsqueak" is to be bandied about, there are many who might be persuaded to attribute much of B.C.'s political troubles to too many "pipsqueaks" in office. The kettle can always call the pot black, which is something even beings so exalted as cabinet ministers should not forget.

"ANIMALS"

Sir,—As an old unionist French worker, I protest against the remarks of P. Kaiser, Boilermakers' Union, who insulted immigrants to Canada in these words: "They are not bringing in trade unionists, they are bringing in animals."

That man, a trade union delegate, shows how much he needs better education and knowledge concerning economic problems and internationalism. He is a reproach to his country and trade unionism.

In the same issue of your paper, Nov. 22, it was reported that Victoria and District Trades and Labor Council will form a racial discrimination committee. I hope such a committee will not reserve its attacks for white men who, unhappy after two wars, are coming to Canada so that they will find some humanity from Canadian workers, while doing their best for Canada. I think if they are rebuffed, they will be easy prey to the Communists.

LEON ETIENNE.

"ANIMALS"

Sir,—I see where the Victoria Trades and Labor Council throws up its hands in horror at a case of racial discrimination in Victoria (quite right, too). But what word can describe their own bitter resentment towards newly-arrived citizens of Canada, going so far as to class them as "animals." This surely must outrage decent people. Do they so soon forget that their own fathers or grandfathers were immigrants too, and by their work and industry in a free country are allowing the membership of the Victoria Trades and Labor Council to enjoy a standard of living undreamed of by millions of less fortunate people. Would they deny them the opportunity that Canada gave so willingly to their own forebears? Also, it is a well-known fact that each immigrant makes more work available. Far from reducing the number of jobs, they create more. No power on earth can keep this vast land empty. There is room for thousands to settle happily on the land, to produce the food that is so urgently needed by a hungry world. In conclusion, I would say these people want nothing from the Victoria Trades and Labor Council; neither their help nor their insults.

FALLING STANDARDS

Sir,—It is a thousand pities that the spirit of the following stanza, taken from "The Builders," by Longfellow, has not animated all and sundry connected with the Memorial Arena:

In the elder days of Art,
Builders wrought with greatest care
Each minute and unseen part;
For the Gods see everywhere.

Apparently, judging from the shoddy workmanship so frequently evident today, standards of excellence are in danger of decay. It seems that the fewer hours worked, the less intense is the effort; the higher the price of materials, the shoddier are those materials. Even the government was prepared to proceed at law against a milkman who sold a better-grade milk. Where are our standards? Are we seeking to throw the emphasis on the dull average to the neglect of the best?

"FROM SEA TO SEA"

Sir,—Re the "Dominion of Canada" fuss and bother, and your quotations from the press of various cities, it is curious that the origin of the word "dominion," as used, seems to be forgotten.

In my school days every Canadian child learned of the incident which decided that we were to be the Dominion of Canada. At the time of Confederation there was much discussion, and considerable argument as to Canada's name-to-be. Finally one of the Fathers of Confederation produced a Bible. He read the prophecy of the coming of Christ, from Zechariah, 9:10: "And He shall speak peace unto the heathen, and His dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth."

It was agreed unanimously that the word "dominion" expressed perfectly their dream of Canada as a Christian nation "from sea even to sea." Hence the "Dominion of Canada."

The discussions nowadays are based upon the fallacy that "dominion" implies domination by Britain. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

Thinking Aloud

". . . of shoes—and ships—and sealing wax—of cabbages and kings."

By TOM TAYLOR

STRANGE. I can't remember the name of any boy, lean or fat, who sat beside me in school, but I remember lots about Billy Bunter, the mythical fat boy who haunted the tuckshop of Greyfriars School.

Perhaps not so strange after all. Fiction has power all its own. Many of us know history, for example, only as served up by novelists who put flesh on dull facts and make them live. Hence the reason that characters like Billy Bunter, himself doubly well fleshed, stick in the mind.

At least I hope so. If this thesis is false then I must conclude my dotage is approaching, for the doings of Harry Wharton and his pals of Greyfriars I can recall easily while at a loss to remember much more recent and more important happenings.

Bunter, I read the other day, is going to be televised, which means he is still a grubby little schoolboy and belongs as much to this age as to the days when I read the Magnet. There are more exciting things for schoolboys to read about nowadays, I daresay, what with people like Cisco Kid, Alley Oop and Rip Kirby performing pictorial wonders every 24 hours. I myself follow the doings of Kirby with bated breath (even if often I wonder why)—almost as much as I did when Sexton Blake was my hero.

* * *

Blake will be an old pal of many other Victorians, of that I'm certain. Breathes there a boy of my vintage who didn't idolize the nipper Tinker and wish that he instead of Tinker was aiding the great detective. Not to speak of the bloodhound Pedro, who never missed a scent. They made the pages of the Union Jack seem like nectar. Sherlock Holmes wasn't even an also ran in those days.

Deeply versed as I was in the excitements of penny dreadfuls, although in truth there was nothing dreadful about the Gem, the Magnet and others of that ilk (virtue was always rewarded and the bully got his nose bloodied), I used to run with my penny to the sweetie shop the day one of my favorite journals came out. Then I would walk the main streets at dire risk to my life, nose buried between the sheets. Fortunately there were no traffic lights then or ordinances about jay-walking.

All these things came back to me a week ago when I read that some otherwise respectable people make a habit, in 1951, of collecting these old-time periodicals. The list is long. My library was wont to consist of the Gem, the Magnet, the Boy's Friend, the Union Jack, the Marvel, Chums, of course, and I think Pluck. Where I got the pennies to buy them is now a mystery, for my weekly allowance must have been one single penny. But I know I read them all.

* * *

What characters peopled my imagination then! Jack, Sam and Pete, for instance, who traveled all over the world in the Marvel (?). Everywhere they went people would pick on Pete, the big handsome negro, and then Jack and Sam would wade in to his rescue. The recipe never altered nor ever failed to please. I recall the day Harry Wharton went first to Greyfriars, a sullen obstinate boy. The bully Bulstrode shoved his face in the mud, much to the bully's later distress for this made Wharton learn to box and become the cheerful leader of the Fourth Form. My favorite, though, was Tom Merry of St. Jim's, who teamed up with Frank Nugent and Arthur Augustus D'Arcy to lead the Shell. The immaculate D'Arcy with his creased pants and monocle was a dream, for he could play outside right like Stanley Matthews.

What great excitement when the Gem and the Magnet crossed and St. Jim's came to play soccer with Greyfriars, and Fatty Wynn in goal for the latter rose to great heights. I've a notion Billy Bunter grew to be a great goalie too, although I could be mistaken about this and anyway how could his cake-loaded body ever leap about like a gazelle.

A host of other mythical names passes in mental review. Inspector Marsden, who became a villain and Sexton Blake's headache, Get-There Gunter, the Blue Crusaders, Levison, Redfern—the parade was endless. Someone reading this might also recall these marvelous fictional beings. At least they make a change from thinking about names like Vishinsky.

All I wish now is that I had kept the cupboardful of penny dreadfuls I once had. Who knows, with collectors now bidding for them I might have got my pennies back.

Jottings From The United Kingdom

By H. J. J. SARGINT, from London

THERE is a feeling in London that the assurance Prime Minister Winston Churchill gave in the House of Commons that American atomic bombs would be based in Britain for "as long as required" will cause no displeasure in America. It will be remembered that two references to the position of these forces have been made since the new Conservative government was formed.

In the King's speech it was stated that legislation would be undertaken to regulate the position of forces belonging to the Commonwealth and foreign powers stationed in this country. Later, in the speech at the Lord Mayor's inaugural banquet at the Guildhall, Churchill referred to the peculiar risks this country had shouldered by providing the principal atomic base for the United States in eastern Britain. This country, Churchill said in a memorable passage, had placed itself in the forefront of Russian antagonism.

It is thought that the arrangements made by Clement Attlee's government with the United States are less comprehensive than originally expected, and well-informed American citizens in London are of the opinion that one matter to be discussed by Churchill when he goes to Washington is how they can be improved. For instance, it is possible that the British prime minister might put forward some proposal that the atomic-bomb-carrying force should be used only with the full agreement of the British government.

It must not be forgotten, however, that there exists a general understanding on the use of the atomic bomb which was reached by President Truman and Attlee in Washington in which the following words occurred: "So far as the use of the atomic bomb is concerned, I was completely satisfied in my talk on this question with President Truman." Anthony Eden quoted it in Parliament last week, and said the present government endorsed what Attlee had said.

MEANWHILE, information from Rome, where the Atlantic Council is meeting, has started another flurry of speculation about the future of the North Atlantic and Middle East commands. This correspondent, however, can state quite categorically that until the Atlantic Council has considered the whole question of the North Atlantic and Middle East commands, no final decision will be made.

It is interesting to record that the report of an Egyptian parliamentary finance committee states that unless normal trade relations with Britain are maintained, state revenue will be "dangerously diminished." The committee states that internal calm and increased cotton prices also are essential for maintaining revenue.

Half the state expenditure goes for salaries of officials, the committee reported, and only 24 per cent is spent on investment for development and increasing production. Concern is expressed that the state might be compelled to forego altogether investments for those purposes. The committee recommended the restriction of administrative expenditure and of the number of high officials, who are wasting public money at a fantastic rate.

This correspondent understands from Whitehall officials that they do not expect that the troubles of the Egyptian treasury will bring Egypt to agreement with Britain on the treaty dispute. There is, however, a chance that they may focus attention increasingly on the graft and corruption of the Wafd government, and so give King Farouk a chance to get rid of it.

* * *

THE national savings movement in Britain, which represents the day-to-day economies of the small investor, has had a very good return since the Conservative government has been back in office. In the first full week after the election, national savings increased by more than $8,400,000, the best return there has been during the last five months.

National savings had been going down steadily during the last year of the Labor government and this form of tapping the small investor was beginning to show signs of a lapse. It is a very good movement. Whichever government is handling it, and it is a well-known fact that the collection and administration of the money gathered in week by week, is excellently done, largely by people who are financially disinterested in the movement.

The steady decrease in the rate of collection, and, it must be said, the steady increase in the rate of withdrawals, had been giving the treasury a good deal of anxiety. The fall in these savings showed a lack of confidence by subscribers in the protection against loss of value in their money, which was controlled by Hugh Dalton and Hugh Gaitskell, Laborite chancellors of the exchequer. This frame of mind does not appear to prevail at present, and it is fairly certain that the national savings movement will have a better run sometime at all events, under R. A. Butler, the chancellor of the new Churchill government.

The Packsack

By GREGORY CLARK

CRANKS and crack-pots just naturally gravitate to the left in politics. They always have. In past ages, reform has always been supported by some pretty wild-eyed characters who must have been a sore trial to the parties they adhered to. But no greater mistake could be made than to presume that all leftish organizations are dominated by crack-pots and cranks. Some of the shrewdest minds of our generation are at work to the left of centre. Their motives are doubtless pretty average. Among us, wherever we stand, there are some who are inspired by high ideals, as well as those completely devoted to their own personal ends.

In trying to focus our attention on the leftish leaders, so as to appraise them, we can hardly be blamed if the antics of the crack-pots around them succeed in diverting our attention. In a Pullman smoker the other day, one of the leading left-wing political personalities in Canada had two of his henchmen traveling with him, apparently from a political meeting. One of these henchmen was of the crack-pot type. He was most anxious that everybody else in the smoking compartment should know what distinguished company they had in his leader. So in a loud, scornful tone, he kept leading the conversation again and again into the most elementary declarations of left wing policy and the rights of what he called the "wokking class." He was a Scot.

Every two or three sentences, he would address his leader by name, so that we could be under no misapprehension as to his distinguished identity.

I never saw a man so upset and angry as that leader. To no avail, he made signs with his eyes, he gave curt answers to his voluble, loud henchman, trying to shut him up. It was no occasion for a recruiting meeting, and the clever leader knew it. But the crack-pot was one of those helpless doolies who are thorns in the flesh of whoever they champion or befriend.

Profanity Over The Air

(From The Edmonton Journal)

JOHN DIEFENBAKER was undoubtedly speaking for thousands of Canadians when he protested in the House of Commons last week against the increasing use of profanity in CBC drama broadcasts. This has been annoyingly marked in recent months, and for many listeners it spoils the pleasure of these programs.

In their zeal to be realistic at all costs, and to adapt realistic works to the air, CBC script writers seem to have overlooked some of the fundamental differences between a radio broadcast and a book or a stage play. Profane or obscene language in a book is a private matter between the author and the reader; the reader can simply close the book. Even in the legitimate theatre, too, the audience is largely made up of "fans" who know what to expect. A radio program, on the other hand, comes into private homes and "performs" before countless thousands of little audiences, including hosts and guests, adults, young people and children. In such a setting, a display of profanity, crudity and the rougher varieties of realism is out of place. It is unwholesome for children, is disliked intensely by adults and embarrassing for all but the habitually vulgar.

It is often said that if a listener doesn't like a program, he can flick the switch and turn it off. That is true when you are alone but it is not so easy when you are either a host or a guest. Social conventions often make a home group something of a "captive audience," forced to listen whether they like it or not. Program planners should bear this in mind.

Few would advocate the imposition on Canadian radio of the kind of rigid censorship which has been found necessary for the movies. Nevertheless, care and restraint in preparing scripts would avoid a good deal of complaint and trouble. Mr. A. D. Dunton, the CBC chairman, has stated that the program department is "looking into" the matter. It hardly needs to be looked into; what is required is an immediate order purging all profanity from all Canadian radio.

Victoria in Beard and Crinoline

From Files of The Daily British Colonist for December, 1864

By G. E. MORTIMORE

POLICE in Victoria were paid so little that they were strongly tempted to accept bribes, The Daily British Colonist said editorially.

The observation came shortly after the acting superintendent of Victoria police had, in fact, been convicted of accepting bribes from gambling houses.

"No man who has read the testimony of the various witnesses in the case of Regina versus Smith can help coming to the conclusion that our police establishment has been a danger and a disgrace to the entire community," The Colonist said bitterly.

"When we read of the cool, audacious manner in which the laws of the country have been compromised—when we learn that the force has been an instrument for carrying out a systematic blackmail generally . . . we have some faint idea of the chasm that has been yawning beneath our feet.

"With a venal police, what security is there, with all the protective power of the English law, for life or property? If the sentinel sleeps at his post, the enemy may steal past unawares, but there is still the risk of awakening the sleeper; there is no peril, however, no fear of detection, when the sentinel is paid to shut his eyes.

"Crime then . . . stalks forth boldly in the light of open day. It shakes honesty by the hand, and robs his till with self-confidence. . . . It becomes in fact the greatest power in the state.

"Various, no doubt, have been the causes of so much dishonesty, but inadequate salaries . . . have had the most to answer for. Men who were obliged to go into debt for almost the bare necessities of life were not . . . likely to refuse a considerable sum of money for merely keeping their eyes shut.

"Falstaff's recruits were a fashionably dressed multitude compared with many of the unfortunates who used to apply for the position of policeman . . . The time has come when a policeman must depend on his legitimate pay, for a livelihood, and not upon blackmailing the timid, sharing spoils with the criminal, or receiving 'hush money' from the gambler."

Luckily for us, that wish is now a fact—in Canada at least.

An American soldier spending his leave in Scotland discovered a fine Collie and asked the old shepherd to sell him the dog.

"Wad ye be takin' him to America?" the Scot asked.

"Yeah, to my ranch in Texas," replied the GI.

"Then I couldna part wi' the dog," said the shepherd.

Then an English officer came along, admired the dog, and bought it without a bit of trouble. This nettled the Texan, who said: "Hey, Scotty, you told me you wouldn't sell the dog; what's the big idea?"

"Na," replied the old Scot, "I said I couldna part wi' him. The dog'll be back shortly from England, but he couldna swim the Atlantic."

Probe of "Cease-Fire Order" Sought

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1 (INS).—The Senate preparedness subcommittee may ask the defense department to explain the recent Korean "cease-fire" mix-up.

This was learned today after Senator Knowland (R., Calif.) demanded an investigation by the full Senate armed services committee.

Knowland, in a telegram to Chairman Russel (D., Ga.), said the American people are entitled to a complete story on the incident rather than "half-truths or misinformation."

News stories from Korea during the week quoted United Nations officers as ordering their men to "fire only when fired upon" along the battle front.

The White House emphatically denied that any provisional cease-fire orders were authorized and questioned the accuracy of the news reports.

Knowland declared: "The American people should not be told one thing and our troops in Korea another."

His request that the full committee conduct an investigation is not likely to be fulfilled inasmuch as Russell is in Europe and will not return until late this month.

However, the "watchdog" subcommittee, headed by Senator Johnson (D., Tex.) could launch a probe of the controversial incident.

Major-Gen. G. R. Pearkes, V.C., M.P. for Nanaimo, told a press conference in Strasbourg, France, yesterday, that he didn't think Canada would object to Britain developing closer association with other European countries. At the same time, he predicted it would be a long time before Britain would be able to join in the movement for a United States of Europe.

Republican Protests Lack of Aid in Korea

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1 (AP).—Representative George H. Bender, Ohio Republican, said today that putting the "U.N. label" on Allied military forces fighting in Korea is a "disgraceful farce," because the United States had contributed 60.6 per cent of the total forces.

Bender said that at a constituent's request, he checked the percentage of forces supplied by all nations to the Korean campaign. The information is official and has been cleared by the security board, he added.

"These figures are shocking in their disclosure that our government has furnished 98.24 per cent of all air forces engaged in Korea; 83 per cent of the naval forces, and 88 per cent of all the ground forces outside of those furnished by the South Korean government itself," Bender said.

He added that the Republic of Korea has contributed 43.16 per cent of the ground forces, 8.62 per cent of navy and 0.51 of air forces.

Bender's figures showed that 50.31 per cent of the ground forces are from the United States.

Bender gave these figures for the forces fighting for the U.N. in Korea.

Resolution Asks Split In Yale Constituency

KELOWNA, B.C., Dec. 1 (CP).—A resolution favoring division of Yale federal riding into two ridings will be presented to the general meeting of the Yale Liberal Association at Vernon Jan. 23.

The proposal, from the association executive, would set up north and south Okanagan provincial ridings as a new federal riding to be known as Okanagan. A new Yale riding would consist of Similkameen and Grand Forks-Greenwood provincial ridings, together with Yale provincial riding.

Yale provincial riding now is part of Kamloops federal riding.

Nanaimo Veteran in Paris

Cpl. Roy will speak in French in response to the greetings of top U.N. delegates.

He and PO. Thomas Dawe of Nanaimo, B.C., are the two Canadians in a group of 50 veterans representing countries with troops in Korea, which arrived here today.

The veterans recently completed a bond-selling tour of the United States and a visit to Ottawa. The tour was sponsored and paid for by the U.S. defense department.

Victoria Symphony Program To Feature Concerto by Trio

A trio will be featured in the second half of the Victoria Symphony program to be presented at the Royal Victoria Theatre, Dec. 11.

The trio will play Beethoven's Concerto for Piano, Cello, Violin and Orchestra in C Major, Opus 56, with piano solo being taken by Charles Palmer, cello solo by Mary Hammond and violin solo by concert master Clifford Evens.

Mr. Palmer, M.A., A.R.C.M., pianist and organist, was choirmaster under Sir Walford Davis, Master of the King's Musik at St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, from 1927 to 1930.

From 1931 to 1937 he was a music scholar at Wadham College, Oxford, under Sir Hugh Allen. In 1938 the distinguished pianist was appointed organist at the Royal Chapel, Windsor Park, and was complimented in His Majesty's own handwriting for work with the choir.

He served as an air gunner with the R.A.F., Middle East, from 1939-1946.

The Edmonton-born pianist had three of his compositions chosen for the First Symposium of Canadian Music last year.

First half of the program will be highlighted by the music of french horn player Hans Stelzner who will take the solo part in Mozart's beautiful Concerto in E Flat.

Power Cut Off At Metchosin

Many a Saturday football broadcast was missed and many a Saturday lunch was cold as Metchosin area residents found themselves without electric power for six hours yesterday.

Cause of the break in service was a transformer fire near the Metchosin sub-station, a B.C. Electric Co. spokesman said. Crews were dispatched to the scene soon after the break came at 10 a.m., and service was restored at 4 p.m.

Medical Health Officer Recommends Study of Fluorinating City Water

Study of the use of fluorine in water supplies has been recommended to the Union Board of Health of Greater Victoria by Dr. J. L. Gayton, medical health officer.

He told a meeting of the board about current activities in experiments with fluorine in water supplies but urged study of these methods.

The health officer also told the board Friday there was no control over children in their purchases of soft drinks and candy during their recesses and [illegible] hours.

Ald. Mrs. Margaret Christie felt that fluorine in water supplies perhaps would be the answer to offset the non-control of the children's purchases. She agreed with Ald. Robert Macmillan that many children were not getting adequate diets.

Use of fluorine also might offset the effect on teeth of poor diets, lack of dietary education and other causes of decaying teeth, said Trustee Richard Reeve.

SATELLITE STREET

BEHIND THE SIGNS WITH Jim Nesbitt

Satellite Street in Oak Bay was named for H.M.S. Satellite, a screw corvette of 1,462 tons and 21 guns which was based at the Esquimalt station from 1857 to 1860 under command of Capt. James Provost.

In 1860 the Satellite ran aground on a reef when entering Nanaimo harbor. Two years later when Capt. Richards re-surveyed the harbor he called the reef Satellite.

In addition to the Oak Bay Street and the Nanaimo harbor rock, the corvette's name has also been given to Satellite Pass in Barkley Sound and Satellite Channel which separates the north end of the Saanich Peninsula from Salt Spring Island.

Yarrows to Organize Production Committee

ON THE LABOR FRONT

By BILL MAYOR

A labor-management production committee will be formed at Yarrows Ltd. shipyard early in 1952, a company spokesman said yesterday.

[illegible] September after extensive study of committees and plans in operation in other industries. Announcement that it would be formed came after unions and employees were polled on their opinions of the proposal.

Both employees and management will be represented by top-level spokesmen in the plan, which is to enable exchange of ideas and information on production problems and to make possible effective action on production, materials conservation, recreation, welfare, morale, safety and other problems.

According to the federal labor department, there were 729 such committees in Canada at March 31, 1951, involving a total of 298,123 workers.

The largest number of committees, 343 was in Ontario; and Quebec was next with 154. There were 429 committees involving 162,694 workers in the manufacturing industries; and 133 committees involving 62,212 workers in the transportation industries.

Remainder of the committees were distributed among the construction, mining, communications, trade, financial and service groups.

An analysis of union affiliations for bargaining agencies showed T.L.C. in 307 committees representing 136,669 employees, Canadian Congress of Labor in 217 representing 82,382 workers and Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labor in 45 committees for 12,[illegible] workers.

Other unions were co-operating in 130 committees for plants with 66,126 workers.

Brewery Workers' (C.C.L.) officials representing 430 workers at four Vancouver Island and lower mainland breweries are slated to meet companies officials this week in the first move to end a 42-day-old strike.

Companies yesterday announced they were willing to resume negotiations. The union Friday night asked Labor Minister John Cates to intervene in the strike. After companies announced their agreement to talks, Mr. Cates said the intervention request would be turned over to the Labor Relations Board.

The board will act as liaison between the disputing factions.

Girls' Group Elects New Slate of Officers

By JOYCE JOHNSON

Mount Douglas High School

Resignation of Peggy Arwick from the presidency of the girls' Y-Teen Club forced the election of new officers. Doreen Drury, who was vice-president, was chosen president, and her former office went to Jennifer Rogers. Club projects now under way are collection of pictures from used Christmas cards for the hospital to use as place mats, and the making of tea towels to donate to the school.

Mount Douglas was honored last Friday when Lieut. Bird and CPO. Wanton visited the school to present a film and short talk to the boys. The subject of the film was "Life in the Navy," and it illustrated the complete training course of a recruit. The short talk given dealt mainly with the advantages of entering the navy with a high school education.

With the inter-high senior B rugby season over, congratulations are due to our team for copping first place honors with Esquimalt High. They have three victories, two ties and one defeat to their credit.

Because of the able coaching of Balfour Skillings, the co-operation of the players, and the hard fight shown, the team came out on top. Players are: L. Johnson, captain; J. Gayton, R. Russell, A. Thomson, N. Lidstone, A. Bell, D. Williams, P. Lambrick, D. Bonar, H. Lum, T. Johnston, B. Skillings, J. Ball, B. Arwick, C. Denman, B. Goodwin, D. Glass and T. Custance.

Girls' inter-house basketball got off to a good start with Skeena trouncing Fraser 50-4. At half-time Skeena had a 22-0 command and for the rest of the game it pretty well held the play. Joyce Johnson topped the scoring honors by pushing up 26 points. May Wong was next with 12 points.

House standings are: Fraser 68, Douglas 56 and Skeena 54.

With Average Income Only $93 Week, U.S. Prudential Agents Strike for More

Strike of 15,000 Prudential Life Insurance Company agents in the United States will not affect local agents of the company.

This was promised here yesterday by Duncan MacPhail, Victoria office staff manager, who added that Quebec agents only may be affected by the walkout.

Picketing outside Prudential offices in 34 States is expected to [illegible] tract expired Friday, said an official of the Insurance Agents International Union (A.F.L.), according to an Associated Press dispatch.

Agents are demanding a boost in basic pay from $35 to $55 weekly. Prudential's president, Carroll M. Shanks, said such a raise would cost the company $35,000,000 a year.

He added that agents now average more than $99 a week including commissions. A union official said the average agent's weekly salary does not exceed [illegible]

Technically the strike began Friday midnight, but there was little outward evidence of it because Saturday is not normally a working day for the agents.

Negotiations between the company and the union broke down last week despite efforts of federal mediators.

Pro-Rec Groups Organizing Holiday Socials

Many events are planned by various Pro-Rec groups for the festive season.

Members and friends of Willows and Monterey square dancing classes will hold a Christmas social and square dance to be held in Willows Auditorium at 8 p.m., Dec. 17. Box lunches are in order.

An old-time social will be held in Belmont High School at 8:30 p.m., Dec. 14.

The Tuesday afternoon women's swimming class is planning a Christmas tea for blind men and women swimmers, at the Crystal Garden, Dec. 18.

Blind Organist Gets Certificate

TORONTO, Dec. 1 (CP).—Anne Gray, 23, organist and pianist, has earned an associate certificate from the Royal Conservatory of Music. Other young persons received certificates too, but it was a special event in the life of Anne. She is blind.

To pass the test, which qualifies her as a teacher or solo instrumentalist, she played four difficult compositions.

Red Cross Gets Disaster Manual

First copies of the Canadian Red Cross publication, "Disaster [illegible] Manual" have arrived at Victoria headquarters.

The manual is intended as a pattern for guidance of Red Cross workers interested in disaster services. It incorporates lessons learned from experiences in recent catastrophes in Canada and the U.S.

It also outlines policies of the committee, duties at the divisional, zone and branch levels and pre-disaster planning.

Rugby Ball Climaxes Active Week Aimed to Bolster College's Vikings

By RANDLE JONES
Victoria College

Windup of a successful week aimed at the promotion and betterment of Victoria College's second-place rugby squad, the Vikings was staged Saturday night at Victoria Badminton Club's Amphion Street Hall in the form of the "Rugby Ball." Music was supplied by Victoria College's Lloyd Orchard and his Men of Note.

Intermission entertainment was by the Women's Undergraduate Society, which staged a Gypsy Dance and the Mexican Hat Dance, as performed by "Wug" members Shirley Smith and Bev Michell.

The committee composed of Dick MacIntosh and Colin Baker under Viking publicity manager Ted Horsey worked many long hours on the effort and enough money should be raised to ship the Vikings to Vancouver for an after-Christmas fray.

At 12:30 Friday howls of laughter poured from the auditorium when the peppiest pep meet in many a moon was in full swing. First, a skit was staged by the Kollege Kar Klub to lure added support to the Viking J.B.A.A. tilt Saturday. Leading roles were taken by Kar Klubers John [illegible]

Transportation in the form of another successful car pool was provided for spectators at the game. Approximately 20 cars, led by a city police escort, left the college at 1:30 p.m. yesterday and wound their way through downtown streets to MacDonald Park for the set-to.

Hilarity at the pep meet reached a climax when the packed auditorium witnessed the second feature, "The Balcony Scene From Othello," an original drama etched by Viking Captain Walt Young. Starring as Desdemona was Stan Powell; Iago was portrayed by Mike Rose and Alan Thackray played the warrior Othello.

Another individual, the "Blind Venetian" was added to give the tragedy body.

The wild and wooly lunch hour was concluded with several practice cheers performed by the blue and g[illegible] cheer leaders. The entire fracas was conducted by [illegible] Bradley.

The week's club activities featured an influx of guest speakers. Dr. G. B. Bigelow spoke to the Pre-Med Club on the subject of modern anaesthetics. John Bigelow and club president Bert Ingram were given the dubious honor of being guinea pigs on which Dr. Bigelow demonstrated the discussion.

On Wednesday Swami Shivanand spoke on Yoga to the psychology classes and so many other curious spectators that at least 150 individuals had to be accommodated in the auditorium.

Eager listeners enjoyed the speaker's definitions and the odd concentrating "positions" which he demonstrated. These entailed such antics as bending over without folding the knees and placing the palms of the hands upon the floor, push-ups without bending the feet, and standing on the head with feet in the widely-publicized 'lotus' position. Grand finale to the exhibition came as the Swami proceeded to draw in his stomach to the extremity. Psychology Professor Gaddes introduced the guest.

Next day, Principal Dr. J. M. Ewing lectured to members of the Student Christian Movement on "Idealism Versus Naturalism."

The Player's Club has tentatively chosen "You Can't Take It With You" as the annual production to be presented sometime in the New Year. Unfortunately, male thespians are in short supply, which may hinder the club's plans. A plentiful supply of female drama fiends is assured.

Teen Tastes In Clothes

By DEE LAVOIE

With such outdoor sports as rugby and soccer coming to the fore, those of you who turn out to cheer for the stalwart teams are looking for clothes that first of all keep you warm and see[illegible]

Ideal for both purposes are those popular—station wagon coats, in either full or three-quarter length. The feature of these is their large and cozy mouton collars that can be turned up so snugly to keep your ears warm when [illegible] blows. Neutral toned gabardine models are available, but slick satin ones are in the lead stylewise.

The men may have led off with bomber jackets but the femmes caught on fast. These comfortable toppers with their fur collars are very practical for casual wear, 'specially when you're on the sidelines of a cold, cold rugby field.

Of course, your tailored navy burberry goes almost everywhere with you whenever it's raining or looks as if it's going to. Usually in the trimly belted style, it's one of the most practical articles in your wardrobe.

KERCHIEFS

To keep your curly locks from going too straight, you'll resort to tying a kerchief around your head, either in the orthodox under-chin way or the more interesting "gypsy" fashion.

Silk ones are high style, but they're not much protection against sudden and unexpected showers. Kerchiefs of fine wool, in geometric or floral designs, are a little better, we hear, and they certainly have come into the teen fashion scene. They're even available in luxurious cashmeres though at the price you might expect.

Feet have a way of getting awfully cold as you watch those scrimmages and passes, and it's a smart gal who foregoes nylons in favor of snugly wool socks. Colored ones have come into their own again, and vie with ever-popular white, especially when they match sweater or gloves.

FUR-LINED

Also perfect for keeping your dainty little feet comfy are fur-lined boots of leather or rubber. Flight boots came into the fashion picture last year and are still to be seen, though they'll probably be even more in evidence when the really cold weather arrives.

Zippered overshoes (in velvet for dress-up) featuring fur trimming are another cute idea, and have you seen the ultra-new nylon boots? These have the added advantage of being light as well as warm.

For most of us, old-faithful rubber boots are still doing their duty, with white the leading color. More and more of the zipper-up-the-side kind are to be seen and these certainly make taking off and putting on a less time-consuming task.

Wooly gloves or fur-lined leather ones will finish off your outfit, and you should be warm enough to really cheer for that team!

Coach Happy As Bays Prove Worth

By BRIAN SMITH
Oak Bay High School

It's all over now, but the cheering. The Howard Russell Trophy is safe within the showcase of Oak Bay High for the ninth straight time; but not without a battle fight. The team cap[illegible] with a 3 to 0 victory over Victoria High on Friday. Happiest person in sight when it was all over was coach Ben Oliver. His boys had proved they had what it takes.

In basketball, the juniors finished the season a league second behind Mount View. Bays won six and lost but one.

Royal Roads and Esquimalt hosted the Rep basketball squad during the week. Bays lost both games by narrow margins but will be hoping for revenge next week when they play return matches on their home court.

Grass hockey play drew to a close last Saturday with the Reps competing for the Bridgman Cup. The girls survived the grueling round-robin play to finish a commendable second in their division.

Lately, a great deal of badminton enthusiasm has been shown with shuttle-artists occupying the auditorium every noon hour. An inter-house competition is being formed and a record entry is expected.

Assemblies continued to be inspiring. On Monday morning Lieutenant Bird and Chief Petty Officer Welden ran a film and spoke to the student body on the importance of an education in the navy. In explaining the U.N.T.D. training course open to college students during the summer and illustrating some aspects of naval life, Lieutenant Bird emphasized the importance of a high school graduation certificate.

Sadie Hawkins Day Dance Planned By Mount Newton Students' Council

By BARRIE WHARF
Mount Newton High School

Plans for a Sadie Hawkins dance Dec. 7 at Royal Oak Hall are almost completed by members of the students' council.

Many house games were cancelled this week due to bad weather. At the end of the first week of play, House II led with 15 points; House III was second with 13 points, and House I third with 12 points.

Grade VIII, with the assistance of Mr. Francis, produced a play, "The Soft Hearted Ghost," which was presented Friday to their own class. Principal characters were Stephen Clark as Egbert, Thelma Fraser as the ghost, Dick Price as father, Claudia Butler as Mrs. Templeton and Grant Sheldrake as Silas P. Slate.

For the past few weeks, men have been busy building additions to the Industrial Arts and Home Economics Annex. The extra space in the Industrial Arts shop will be used as a drafting room and the Home Economics extension will be used as a sewing room.

On Monday members of Grade VII A sponsored the films "A Man, a Gun and a Dog" and "Winter Sports." A silver collection was taken for the Red Cross. A candy sale held by Grade IX was also for the benefit of the Red Cross.

A tired Grade XI class arrived at school Thursday morning after an enjoyable party at the home of Shirley Robinson Wednesday night. It was a highly successful affair complete with fruit punch and a three-layer chocolate cake.

Eager Actors Try Out For Victoria High Play

By SANDY LAWRENCE
Victoria High School

Tryouts for the eight major roles in the forthcoming spring play, "Our Town," were held in the auditorium Wednesday and Thursday afternoons.

Many of the eager-eyed young actors who miss major parts will play bit parts, reported Drama Director Mayne who stated that "the cast is shaping up very nicely and I hope to have the major players chosen soon."

Mr. Mayne explained that players are chosen by a committee of five teachers, headed by himself, for their acting ability and clarity of voice.

Contrary to our predictions of two weeks ago, "Hamlet" failed to appear as scheduled due to a strike by the Ghost's Guild or some such thing. However, Parker, Shearing and Company bounced into the school Monday noon, followed by a galaxy of stars including "Jimmy Durante," the Ink Blots, Burgess and Abbott, the Ukelele Kings and that great Shakespearean actor, Sir Lawrence O'Kidney, all of whom endeavored to produce a pep meet worthy of their reputation.

Continuing the trend of musical presentations with a decidedly Scottish flavor, the mixed choir, under Miss Norma Douglas, made its first appearance of the year at the Monday morning assembly, when it sang a medley of songs from the Hebrides, including "Westering Home," "Praise of Islay" and the well known "Road to the Isles."

Returning from our boy bird watchers' meeting the other day we spied a covey of red-eyed green-gilled biology students hovering over a dissecting table. These birds, our staff ornithology experts tells us, have a strange allergy to food brought about by prolonged contact with dismembered frogs, crabs and grasshoppers.

Esquimalt High Choir to Sing At Club Sirocco

By SHIRLEY HALLMARK
Esquimalt High School

Right in season was the boys' Hi-Y victory dance, "rugby ball," held as a school party Friday night in the recreation hall.

The get-together featured many items such as novelty games and dances. A member of the honored senior rugger team, Des Nax, was appropriately named as master of ceremonies.

With Christmas nearly at hand the school choir under the direction of W. C. Ozard will be making some of its popular public appearances. In preparation for this, a selected group of students will appear at a variety show staged at Club Sirocco Wednesday evening.

The Christmas dance committee is already at work on the dance, "Tinsel Twirl," to feature the Royal Columbians orchestra. Friday, Dec. 21 is the date, and, as the new gym is not yet finished, it will again take place in Fraser Street Hall. The duties of the master of ceremonies will be handled by Laurie Dodd.

North Saanich Hoopsters Beat Salt Spring Teams

By DAVE BROWN and
ANTHONY GAMBRILL
North Saanich High School

Six Salt Spring Island basketball teams visited North Saanich Nov. 24 for their annual hoop contests. North Saanich won four of the six games and lost two.

In the feature game of the day, North Saanich senior boys had little trouble in whipping Salt Spring 33-9. Art Olsen netted 10 points for the winners and Laurie Goodman got four for the losers.

Salt Spring won the senior girls' contest 42-17. The Salts' Clare Devine was good for 15 points, and Betty Bradley, Val Head and Mary Sheppy got four points each for North Saanich.

Don Norby's 15-point effort led North Saanich to an easy 35-7 victory in the intermediate boys' division. Mike Jackson, Brian Brenton and Albert Alay got two points apiece for the Salts.

In the intermediate girls' game, Salt Spring clipped Saanich 22-9 as Evelyn Mouat scored eight points for the victors. Sylvia Erb picked up seven points for North Saanich.

North Saanich won both the junior games. The Saanich boys crushed Salt Spring 28-13 and the Saanich girls eked out a close 15-11 decision in their contest.

The first of a series of six evenings of entertainment for the students was held last Friday under the sponsorship of the students' council. Popular old favorite, "The Adventures of Huck Finn," starring Mickey Rooney; a short on bowling, and a cartoon, filled most of the program which was rounded out by an hour of dancing.

Paddy Dalton thanked staff members who aided in organizing the evening and also Rev. Gore Langton who provided musical entertainment. Another similar show will be held Dec. 7.

A Red Cross candy sale was held at noon hour Friday with more than 160 bags of candy, home-made style, netting $16 for the Red Cross.

Miss N. Jones, Mrs. R. Dymond, Jackie MacConnachie and Johnny Beattie arranged the sale, which provided money for future Red Cross activity.

Mount View Proud Of Boys' Hoop Win

By BARBARA WHITELEY
Mount View High School

Mount View is proud of the Junior Boys' Basketball Team and Coach Burgess for hitting top place in their league. The boys won the cup by overcoming a strong Mount Douglas squad 31-26.

Five peppy cheer leaders, attired in school sweaters and hats, conducted yells in Mount View's support. The gymnasium resounded with the chanting of Joginder Bains, Elinor Thompson, Gary Jones, Murray Miller, and June Budd of the cheer team.

The Junior Girls' Basketball Team, coached by Mrs. Adlem, stands an even chance to come out on top in their league. Outcome of the game with Oak Bay Wednesday will determine the champs.

Mount View's first assembly of the year featured "Station BUOK" with Alan Fatt as master of ceremonies. Performers included Peggy Thomas, vocalist; Terry Pye, trombone; Frances Merriman, acrobatic dance; Wayne Halstrom, piano; Mary Fletcher, bagpipes, and Alan Snowsell and Jackie Ormond as accompanists.

A hilarious skit was presented and received rousing applause from the audience. Cast of the skit included Murray Millar as the judge, Roger Purves as a prisoner, Diana Wilson as the attorney and Alan Fatt as a lawyer.

The program concluded with students singing a lively rendition of the school song.

A skating party under sponsorship of the Grade X guidance class, has been planned for Tuesday evening at the Memorial Arena. All members of the student body are invited to attend for an evening of fun and exercise.

The big Christmas edition of The Scribe will be out Dec. 14. Editor Dinah Kerr and her staff have been hard at work composing many articles and features to be found in its pages. At a recent impromptu meeting of The Scribe staff, Margaret Tredwell was chosen advertising manager for The Scribe yearbook.

The Junior Red Cross has sent out an appeal for such items as writing pads, pencils, toothbrushes and ball point pens for patients in the Veterans' Hospital. Students are asked to have their donations in by Dec. 7.

The Commercial Club has been hard at work under president Shirley Nelson producing the Mount View Guide Book, containing data on various student clubs, sports and other organizations. It is expected to be released Friday, Dec. 7.

The Girls' Y-Teens are asking the student body for donations to their fish pond stall in the coming Mount View bazaar. This appeal should be well received as the Y-Teens are responsible for many services to the school.

Tickets are now on sale for Mount View's second big social event of the season, the Christmas dance, the Snow Ball. Under the sponsorship of the students' council the Snow Ball is expected to be a big success. The dress is semi-formal and refreshments will be served.

Season Starts For Badminton, Floor Hockey

By HELEN KERMODE
S. J. Willis Junior High School

At last the popular boys' floor hockey league started into its exciting play when Mr. Gillie dropped the puck at noon on Tuesday. This first game was played between House II and III intermediates, and won by House III. Wednesday House II defeated House I in the junior division. Altogether there are 17 teams.

Because of lack of space, the girls have been asked not to attend these games. They will have the privilege of seeing the finals.

House badminton for the girls is also being welcomed to the activity list.

Class 8D sponsored a noon-hour movie and candy sale as its contribution to the Stan Smith Fund. The classes all responded eagerly when they were asked to aid the Smiths.

Two features were added at the last dance. The Grade VIII students gave an exhibition of square dancing to show the other students how much fun it could be. The other addition was the doubled attendance caused by the news that the boys would have an opportunity to learn to dance.

Thirty girls, 10 from each grade, volunteered to instruct the boys so that they could join in the fun. The instructresses wore special badges for identification.

The school band played a short concert, consisting mainly of marches, last Wednesday noon hour.

The first meeting of the newly-formed Square Dance Club was well attended.

GOOD WRITING

WINNIPEG (CP) — Business letters should be easy to read, courteous, friendly and simple, says Dr. Lyda McHenry, associate professor of business administration at Wayne University, Detroit. She told a meeting here brevity is excellent only when it is complete.

Students Stage Election Rally During Week

By RUTH MILLS
Belmont High School

There has been an atmosphere of excitement in the school this week due to the election campaign for a new social convener. The halls are decorated in every possible corner with posters advocating two candidates: Maxine Fraser and Judy Tweedie. Tuesday at lunch time a parade six people long marched through every room with placards on their backs. The first in line, Frank Mitchell, blew on a horn. They made it very plain that they thought Maxine the best.

Wednesday in the auditorium Belmont's band was hired to play for Judy. Geoffrey Horner outlined her program and Evelyn Smart introduced her. After this Frank Mitchell introduced Maxine and David Gurr who spoke for her.

Each side took his own candidate and introduced her to the junior grades at noon hour.

The Paper Club plans to hold noon-hour dances, modern and old-time, in support of the Photography Club. Once the Christmas exams are over members intend to get busy on the newspaper and produce it before the holidays. This paper will have a Christmas theme but will contain the usual class reports, poems, sports and social write-ups and letters to the editor. Sinclair Ash has been appointed editor and Ruth Mills managing director.

DOUBLING UP

PICTOU, N.S. (CP)—Need of additional space in the town schools was forcibly pointed out in reports to the school commissioners. In one Grade 9 class there are 50 desks and 53 pupils. Two of the extras use the teacher's desk, while the third is a "floater," using any that happens to be vacant that day.

Central P.T.A. Makes Fair Big Success

By BARBARA SANSON
Central Junior High School

In their first big endeavor to raise funds, Central Junior High P.T.A. has proved what a wonderful thing community spirit is. Through their planning and efforts, our recent country fair was a huge success.

Co-operation was the keynote of this affair and parents, teachers and students alike worked together all the way through.

The men and boys, gaily decked out in plaid shirts and straw hats, looked after the games, while the women were in charge of the novelty, white elephant, home cooking and food stalls.

Bingo, fishpond and several other games of chance saw a lot of turnover in bogus money.

Extra-curricular activities have been curtailed this week, taking a back seat to examinations. These were finished on Friday, but the results won't be released until a few days before the holidays. Some of the pale faces noticed around the school aren't entirely due to lack of sunshine.

Laurel and Hardy have lost none of their appeal, at least to the younger generation. As a break in the test schedule, Mr. Macdonald arranged a hilarious movie starring the fat and thin man in "The Ghost Ship."

Academy of Arts Elects Novelists

NEW YORK, Dec. 1 (AP)—Nobel Prize novelist Pearl S. Buck and five men Friday were elected to the American Academy of Arts and Letters. The others were architect Frank Lloyd Wright, Thomas Mann, another Nobel Prize novelist, composer Douglas Moore, winner of the 1951 Pulitzer Prize in music; sculptor Carl Milles and Pulitzer Prize-winning poet Leonard Bacon.

Philippine Clash Kills 11 Persons

MANILA, Dec. 1 (AP)—Eleven persons were killed during the last 24 hours in skirmishes between Philippine troops and Communist-led Huk bands north of Manila, the Philippine News Service reported today. Seven were Huks.

U.S., French Ships Collide

ANTWERP, Belgium, Dec. 1 (Reuters)—The 7,198-ton American steamer North Beacon suffered damage below the waterline Friday in a collision with the French ship Grenoble in the Scheldt Estuary. The American vessel was towed back to port. The Grenoble was holed in the hull.

Between 1865 and 1887 the mileage of railways in the United States was increased from 35,000 to 87,000 miles.

Mainguy Takes Over Post As Naval Chief of Staff

OTTAWA, Dec. 1 (CP).—Vice-Admiral H. T. W. Grant, who retired today as chief of naval staff, said in a farewell message that the navy is "close-hauled and beating to windward."

The 52-year-old chief formally turned over his command to Vice-Admiral E. R. Mainguy, 52, former flag officer Atlantic coast.

The retiring chief sent this message to all ships and establishments:

"On relinquishing my appointment as chief of naval staff, I convey to all flag officers, officers and men of His Majesty's Royal Canadian Navy and reserves and to all civilian heads of departments and other members of the civil service connected with the naval service, my deep appreciation of your loyalty and devotion to duty over the past 4½ years.

"As a result of your steadfastness of purpose, the navy is close-hauled and beating to windward.

"I leave in the sure knowledge that both in peace and war the seas will be kept in accordance with the traditions of the great service I have had the honor to command."

Uncle Wiggily Story - - -

By Howard Garis

BOILING MOLASSES

Bunty the cute little orphan rabbit had met Uncle Wiggily one day as the rabbit gentleman was hopping away from his hollow stump bungalow to look for an adventure. Bunty had given Mr. Longears some empty lollypop sticks. She had asked him if he could make any lollypops to put on the empty sticks.

"Yes, perhaps I can do that," Uncle Wiggily had answered Bunty. "You say, my dear, that you ate the lollypops that once were on the ends of those sticks?"

"Yes, that's what I did," Bunty replied. "I was going to throw away the sticks after I sucked and chewed off the lollypop candy. And then I happened to think that you, Uncle Wiggily, can do anything."

"Ha! Ha, my dear!" laughed the rabbit gentleman. "I would not go so far as to say that I can do ANYTHING."

"You can find adventures, can't you?" the orphan rabbit asked.

"Oh, yes, I sometimes find adventures," said Mr. Longears.

"And you can write stories for boys and girls, can't you?" Bunty twinkled her little pink nose as she waited for the answer.

"Yes," said the bunny gentleman. "I often write stories."

"Then I am sure," went on Bunty, "that you can put some lollypops on the ends of these empty sticks. You and Uncle Butter made ice cream cones out of birch bark, so I am sure you can put lollypop candy on the ends of these sticks. Please do!"

"All right, I will try," said Mr. Longears. "Let's go in my bungalow."

The first thing Uncle Wiggily did, after entering the bungalow, was to open the door to the kitchen.

"What are you looking for?" Bunty inquired.

"I am looking for Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy," replied Mr. Longears.

"Is she going to help you put lollypops on the ends of these empty sticks?" Bunty wanted to know. "Do you need Nurse Jane to help you?"

"Just the opposite," said Uncle Wiggily as he hopped out to the kitchen. "If Nurse Jane had been here, I think she would not let me try to make new lollypops for these old sticks."

"Why wouldn't she let you?" asked Bunty.

"She would say that I was going to mess up her kitchen," was the rabbit gentleman's answer. "But I think Nurse Jane has gone to Uncle Butter's grocery to buy some Swiss cheese. So, while she is away, you and I will play, Bunty."

"What shall we play?" asked the orphan rabbit.

"We shall play at making new lollypops for old sticks," was the reply of Mr. Longears. "As Nurse Jane is out, we can do as we please in her kitchen. But I will try not to mess it up."

"If you do mess it up," said Bunty, "I will help you clean the kitchen, Uncle Wiggily."

"That will be fine, Bunty. And now to start making new lollypops."

"Do you know how?" Bunty wanted to know.

"Not exactly," Uncle Wiggily answered. "But, after all, lollypops are only candy on the end of a stick. And I know how to make candy."

"What kind of lollypop candy are you going to make?" was Bunty's next question.

"Molasses candy," replied Mr. Longears. "That is the easiest candy to make. So I shall start boiling some molasses."

In a short time a pan of molasses was boiling on the stove in Nurse Jane's kitchen. Uncle Wiggily sniffed and snuffed and said:

"These lollypops are going to be very good, Bunty."

"I hope so," said the orphan rabbit. "Do you think, Uncle Wiggily, that the lollypops will soon be ready?"

"Hark!" suddenly exclaimed Mr. Longears. "I hear a noise!"

What noise did the rabbit gentleman hear? I can tell you tomorrow if the gold fish doesn't sit down on a soft chocolate caramel candy and stick so fast that he can't swim upside down around his tank.

Cowpunching, Soldiering, Forestry All in Career of Late J. C. O. Adam

Cowpunching, homesteading, mail delivery, soldiering and forestry all were the lot of J. C. O. Adam of Victoria.

The 75-year-old Victorian, who died early in November, was born in Scotland, the son of the late Dr. W. H. Adam, deputy inspector-general of hospitals and fleets, Royal Navy, and a grandson of General Simon Fraser of the Royal Marines.

Mr. Adam reached Regina in 1890 and went north to his brother's farm to spend a hard apprenticeship in roping, breaking bronchos and handling six-shooters and rifles. With his brother he rode as far west as the Rockies and south to Wyoming.

In 1897 he visited England for Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee. On his return to Canada he enlisted in the 5th C.M.R. to fight in the Boer war. He returned with his regiment to take part in the Canadian contingent's procession at King Edward VII's coronation.

A short time later Mr. Aram began homesteading and at the same time opened Arbury post office, serving both as postmaster and postman over 15 miles of open prairie.

He married Maude Gilchrist in 1906. Their family includes Mrs. Roy Harper, Minstrel Island, and three sons, F. J. and M. H. Adam of Nobleville, and J. C. Adam of Langford.

Rejected from the armed forces at the outbreak of the First World War, Mr. Adam became farming instructor at Muscowignan Indian Reserve and was able to treble grain production.

In 1923 he left the Department of Indian Affairs to begin homesteading at Nobleville, Sask., where his sons still work. He also worked as patrolman for the federal forestry department and Saskatchewan forestry department.

FUGITIVE CAUGHT

During his time in this district Mr. Adam helped capture a fugitive sought in connection with the murder of an R.C.M.P. corporal. Guessing that the fugitive would have to cross the homestead, horses were turned loose and all lights put out awaiting the hunted man.

Late at night there was a knock at the door. A man said he wanted transportation but instead accepted an offer of a bed for the night.

One of the sons slipped from the house to inform the police. Travel to the police office was done through heavy brush to avoid two other fugitives implicated in the crime, who were known to be traveling by road.

R.C.M.P. arrested the sleeping man. But not before they withdrew a loaded 30.30 Colt revolver from under the pillow.

The fugitive was later hanged for murder.

In 1944 Mr. Adam moved to Victoria with his wife. He immediately was employed in Yarrows Limited, but retired in 1947 to Langford.

His garden there occupied his time until he became ill and was taken to Royal Jubilee Hospital, where he died of a heart attack.

Egyptian Police Raid Arms Cache

CAIRO, Dec. 1 (Reuters).—Egyptian police today raided a Socialist "liberation unit" training camp in the desert behind the Pyramids and seized a large quantity of arms and ammunition. The raid was in accordance with the government decision to supervise activities of liberation battalions pledged to force the British out of the Suez Canal zone.

Saanich Badminton Finalists Wait Turn to Play

Women's doubles finalists in annual Saanich badminton tournament are shown in friendly mood before playing their match last night. Left to right are Barbara Atkins, "Bumps" Salmon, Joyce McDonald and Muriel Knott. Mrs. Knott and Mrs. McDonald retained their crown with easy triumph. Mrs. McDonald regained singles title she held for several years before her marriage, when she was Joyce Thomson.

Men's doubles finalists compare racquets while waiting their match. Left to right are: Stu Reid, Norm Lambrick, Rom Knott and George Lane. Lambrick and Reid put up stiff battle before bowing to defending champion in three games. Lane also retained men's singles title and mixed doubles crown, which he shared with Mrs. Salmon.—(Colonist photos by Jim Ryan.)

Vancouver	6	13	6	84	117	18
Calgary	6	14	2	65	88	14

Next game, tonight: Tacoma at Seattle.

Tacoma Rockets jumped back into sole possession of fourth place in the P.C.H.L. last night when they defeated Victoria Cougars, 4-1, in a rugged game at Tacoma.

In other games, New Westminster Royals stopped Vancouver's comeback momentarily and added to their lead by downing the Canucks, 3-2, at New Westminster and Calgary surprised with a 4-3 triumph over Saskatoon Quakers.

Details of the game at Tacoma were skimpy last night but in a third-period set-to, which reportedly involved Mark Marquess and Andy Hebenton, both drew majors for fighting and Rocket defenseman Bill Davidson sat out a 10-minute misconduct charge for objecting too strenuously a penalty against Rocket Buck Jones. Referee Dick Davis called a total of 17 penalties for 48 minutes.

BALLANCE HURT

Bobby Ballance, playing his second game for Cougars, left first period with a cracked rib.

Cougars halted Tacoma's top line but could not stop the Rocket rookies Moe Young and Bart Bradley counting in the first period. Marquess boosted the margin to 3-0 in the second canto when goalie Jim Shirley came 15 feet out of his net and failed to stop the rushing Rocket.

PREVENTS SHUTOUT

Reg Abbott robbed Goalie Doug Stevenson of his shutout when he deflected Hebenton's shot early in the third period.

Cougars now rest until Friday when Calgary Stampeders return for their second visit. Vancouver Canucks will be here the following night.

Only 2½ hours after arriving home from their strenuous prairie trip, the Royals engaged their crosstown rivals. They ran up a 3-0 lead on two goals by Gordie Fashoway and another by Bob Love and withstood a vain Vancouver attempt to tie the score.

Lorne Davis and Larry Popein pierced the defensive shell of the Fraser squad and Canucks pulled goalie Red McAtee for an extra forward but the train-weary Royals held out.

SERIOUSLY HURT

Calgary's victory snapped a seven-game winless streak and ended an eight-game winning streak of the Quakers.

The game was a costly one for Stampeders, who lost Milt Pechet, one of their most effective forwards for six to eight weeks. Pechet suffered a broken vertebra when checked into the boards by Saskatoon rearguard Bill Heindl early in the first period.

IT BEATS ME

By Jim Tang

Take it from Lester Patrick, good hockey players are scarcer than ever and any fan who might be inclined to dispute this can earn himself a sizeable reward if he can unearth a player who would help Victoria's beleaguered Cougars.

Victoria fans may moan and groan at the obvious need of two or three players but no one is suffering as much as the Victoria owner. And it is not mainly the possibility of dwindling attendance. After more than 50 years in the sport, Patrick is not yet inured to criticism and his desire to win has not diminished one bit.

There can be no doubt about the sincerity in his efforts to find replacements but his problem is apparently the problem of all owners. Injuries have taken their toll throughout hockey and most teams are looking for help, have none to spare.

In the past two weeks, Patrick has tried everything and everybody and, but for the deal which brought Bobby Ballance for a good chunk of cash, the answer has always been the same.

Canadiens apparently have decided they have fulfilled commitments; Detroit Red Wings have their two farm clubs, Indianapolis and Edmonton, both hollering for help; Chicago Black Hawks are in a bad way themselves and standings indicate their P.C.H.L. farm at Calgary will take whatever can be spared; Boston Bruins, coached by son Lynn, have previous commitments with son Murray at Tacoma, and New York Rangers are out. Toronto offers only slight hope although the Leafs have an obligation to the Cougars.

A.H.L. clubs have been contracted without avail and there is only a chance that a player may be picked up in the P.C.H.L. Money, within the bounds of reason, is no object at the moment.

The Cougars can, perhaps, be faulted for failure to buy a player or two before the season opened but there are mitigating circumstances. They may have counted too heavily on what the Canadiens would send and after signing nine of 11 players sent, found that two, so far at least, have failed to come up to expectations. There is probably something that could be said, too, about the deal in which Vancouver Canucks procured forward Lorne Davis and defenseman Hugh Currie from Buffalo, a Canadien affiliate. It all adds up to a questionable future but no one is more aware than Patrick that the man who will be hurt the most if things don't go right is the man who owns his hockey club.

Alberni Avenges Defeat; Upsets Cleaners, 43-39

By JIM EDDIE

If last night's basketball game between Alberni Athletics and Victoria Individuals can be taken as any criterion, this year's Vancouver Island senior "A" men's hoop play-offs should be more intense than ever before.

Reversing the procedure of previous seasons when each team won its home games, Alberni eked out a 43-39 triumph in a well-played game at Victoria High School last night to gain revenge for a 49-40 setback on its home floor on Friday.

TURN ON EX-MATES

Two former members of the Athletics did their utmost to turn back their past teamates. Porky Andrews, playing coach of the "A's" last season, took scoring honors for Individuals with 12 points and sparked their attack with his play-making ability. Young Wes Maulstaid almost pulled the Cleaners out of the ruck with three last-quarter baskets and was a constant source of worry to the Athletics with his ball-stealing ability which set up several Victoria baskets.

HAD TOUGH TASK

Another standout for the Cleaners was a slimmed Doug Peden, who made his debut at guard and turned in a strong defensive game. Given the tough task of shadowing Harry Kermode, Peden held the Alberni coach to two field goals, both scored from well out.

Despite his check, Kermode was an Alberni star, a steadying influence on attack and a bulwark on defense. Pivotman Joe Buchanan paced both clubs with 18 points, finding litle opposition under the hoop without big Johnny Clark to check him. Clark suffered a recurrence of his knee injury at Alberni Friday and was advised by his doctor to sit out the game. Elmer Curtis also remained on the sidelines to give his injured leg more time to heal.

The clubs were tied, 9-9, at the quarter but Alberni forged ahead, 17-15, at the half, and 32-26 at three-quarters.

Bill Prior sparked Arrow Furniture to a 50-31 triumph over Victoria College Vikings in the senior "B" preliminary.

Line-ups follow:

Alberni—Kermode 6, Lynn 7, Mitchell 2, Buchanan 18, Waugh, [illegible] Dupuis 9. Total 43.

Victoria—Andrews 12, Clarkson 8, Boyes, Peden 4, Maulstaid 8, Wright 7. Total 39.

Vikings—Chubaywich, Passi 2, McIntosh 2, Rimmer, Gregg 9, Woolley 7, Smith 2, Preston 1, Bowden 12. Total 31.

Arrows—Ranson 9, Prior 12, McCaghey 8, Davidson 7, Ireland 8, Anderson 6. Total 50.

Ex-Champions Dominant; McDonald, Lane Triumph

Only one new champion emerged from the finals of the annual Saanich badminton tournament at the Brentwood Community Hall last night and she was a player, who held the title on numerous occasions in the past.

She in Joyce McDonald, formerly Joyce Thomson, who defeated Libby Boak, 15-2, 15-1, in the women's singles final to regain the crown she held a monopoly on before her marriage.

TRIPLE WINNER

George Lane, Victoria's leading male player, retained the three titles he held last year. He defeated Jim Wells, 15-8, 15-1, in the men's singles final; teamed with Rom Knott to retain the men's doubles crown with a 15-5, 17-18, 15-5 triumph over Norm Lambrick and Stu Reid. Lane came back a third time to partner Bumps Salmon in the mixed doubles final and smashed to a 15-11, 15-2 triumph over Carol Chalmers and Reid.

Mrs. McDonald partnered Muriel Knott in the women's doubles final to add another title with a 15-3, 15-4 triumph over Barbara Atkins and Mrs. Salmon.

BEST VETERANS

Stu Skillings and Ben Davies outlasted Ray Watson and Fred Webb, 15-9, 11-15, 15-10, to capture the veteran doubles crown.

Results of junior finals follow:

Girls' singles—Phyllis Rose defeated Sally Pollard, 4-11, 11-8, 12-10.

Boys' singles—Don Francis defeated Geoff Conway, 15-9, 18-17.

Police Busy at Nanaimo As Monarchs Trimmed

NANAIMO, B.C., Dec. 1 (CP)—Making their second start under sponsorship of Dietrich-Collins, Kerrisdale Monarchs ran into a roughing here tonight and dropped an 8-2 verdict to Nanaimo Clippers in a Pacific Coast Senior Amateur Hockey League fixture.

Two fights featured the third period and police were called to stem trouble. First came when Clippers' Jack Kirk took exception to a remark hurled from the Kerrisdale players' box and attempted to clean out the source singlehanded. Fans near the Monarch box tried to enter the fray but the R.C.M.P. moved in fast.

Shortly after Al Lewsey and Lundmark tangled and each drew five minutes but again the police were called to break up the ice-surface battle. From then on R.C.M.P. occupied the penalty box to prevent further trouble.

Boxing Trials For Vancouver

VANCOUVER, Dec. 1 (CP).—The combined Olympic trials and Canadian boxing championships will be held here April 24, 25 and 26, Syd Greenwood, secretary of the British Columbia branch of the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada, announced Friday.

Powerful Foes On Schedule For Cleaners

Victoria Individuals have set a December schedule that should give a true indication of the club's proper rating for post season playoffs.

The Cleaners will meet the ever-popular Alpine Dairy quintet at Victoria High School next Saturday. The strong Buchan's Bakery club which defeated the Individuals two weeks ago was unanimous in the opinion that the Alps are still the team to beat in the Northwest League.

An even stronger test will be provided by a home-and-home series against Gail Bishop's Bellingham team of former professionals. Individuals will travel to Bellingham on Dec. 15, and play a return game at Victoria High School on Dec. 22.

Packers Win

KELOWNA, B.C., Dec. 1 (CP)—Spotting Penticton V's a 2-0 jumpoff lead, Kelowna Packers rammed in five straight goals tonight for a clean-cut 5-3 victory in an Okanagan Senior Amateur Hockey League fixture witnessed by 2,400 fans, largest home crowd of the season.

Collingwood Gives United Scare; Late Goal Decides

Collingwood may not be the [illegible] team on the Pacific Coast but the Vancouver and District League leaders almost finished Victoria United's Anderson Cup hopes at Royal Athletic Park yesterday afternoon.

It took 85 minutes of play before the Victorians could score the only goal of the match as the persistent on-the-ball play of Collies completely disrupted their passing. During most of the time, the 700 United supporters on hand alternately pleaded with and leered at their favorites.

The blanking was the third in a row for United goalie Joe Travis, who shut out Vancouver City and St. Andrews on the two previous Saturdays. It was also the first defeat of the season for the young, hustling Collingwood club, which had won nine, drawn two in previous play this season.

Only in the first 10 minutes and the final 15 did United show the football expected. In between, the Victoria attack spluttered and faltered as the Collies forced their style of play on unwilling and inept opponents.

United persisted in playing through the middle against a packed defense as Collies obviously waited for a break to duplicate their 1-0 win in last spring's Connaught Cup play-downs. They came close many times and had they scored the first goal, the result would undoubtedly have been reversed.

PICKBURN IN FORM

Only John Pickburn played his best game for United and it was only justice that he was credited with the lone goal. The big redhead, the most constructive right-half United has had, sent in one of his dangerous lobs about five minutes from time. The ball came down just past the crossbar with centre-forward Wallace Milligan parked alongside goalie Jack McMurray.

McMurray, who had played an excellent game, said after the game that he had thrown the ball into his own net and credit was given to Pickburn although Milligan's presence undoubtedly had its effect.

United had the more dangerous scoring chances and an edge in territorial play, but weak positional play, general off-color displays, particularly by the insides, and poor shooting spoiled them all.

Line-ups:

Collingwood—Jack McMurray, Al Douglas, Bob Williams, [illegible].

Victoria United—Joe Travis, Bill Hare, Joe Robbins, John Ferguson, Bill Robbins, Jack Robbins, Cedric Hood, [illegible], Wallace Milligan, [illegible], Al Travis. Spares: [illegible], Jack Strachan.

Ducat Sale Ups Fund For Player

If Victoria soccer fans respond to the sale of tickets to next Saturday's benefit match between Victoria United and New Westminster Royals at Royal Athletic Park, Einar Flaatten, United's injured Norwegian player, will be well looked after.

Flaatten, who suffered a serious kidney injury in a match against Vancouver on November 17, will remain in hospital for another two weeks and will need another month of rest before he can return to work. However, X-rays have disclosed that he should suffer no permanent disability.

GOOD START MADE

Fans have contributed $117.50 to the fund for Flaatten and the United Booster Club made a good start on advance sale of tickets yesterday by selling 162 during the Anderson Cup match between United and Collingwood.

A bright note was injected when it was learned that United president, George Eade, had had the foresight to insure his players and that a good part of the heavy hospital and doctor's bills will be taken care of by the insurance.

ADVANCE SALE

Tickets will be on sale during the week at Victoria sporting goods stores and booster club members and United players will help boost what is hoped will be a heavy advance sale.

Game time is 2.30, with Harris Cycles and Army, Navy and Air Force Division II juvenile teams battling for the league lead in a preliminary at 1.

Victorian Wins Northwest Paddle Crown

Nancy Craig, leading feminine table tennis player in Victoria and the province, added a new trophy to her big collection last night when she won the women's singles title in the new Northwest table tennis tournament at North Vancouver.

Mrs. Craig defeated Jean Rose, Vancouver city champion, 12-21, 21-12, 21-15, 21-10, in the final.

Val Druce, Victoria's other representative in the tourney, was eliminated in an early round.

Boxers Prepare for Thursday Card

Terry McVeeters (left) and Fred Curtis (right), two boxers who will appear on a 10-bout card sponsored by Esquimalt Boxing Club at Victoria Ballroom Thursday, take time out from training to offer pointers to youthful Dick Tschritters. Young Bruneau of Navy and Bert Wilkinson of Esquimalt will be rematched in feature bout by popular request. First five bouts will feature Esquimalt boxers against St. Louis College pugilists for Knowles' Memorial Inter-Club Trophy.—(Colonist photo by Jim Ryan.)

VANCOUVER, Dec. 1 (CP).—Vancouver Firefighters maintained its three-point hold on third place by defeating Vancouver City, 7-4, at Callister Park today in the highest-scoring game of the Pacific Coast Soccer League season.

At New Westminster, St. Andrews defeated the Royals, 3-1, before some 150 fans.

Loose defensive play cost City the game. The Firemen led 3-2 at the half on three goals by Dave Brown and one each by Dave Redline and Art Hughes. Two of Brown's goals came from penalty kicks against city goalie Norm Guistini.

Bus Byford and Harry Buchanan tallied for City in the first half.

City controlled most of the play in the second canto but failed to show any polish around Firemen's net. Byford netted twice for City and Frank Ambler scored two for Firefighters.

Wes Henderson scored on a penalty kick and Frank Noga added another goal to give St. Andrews a 2-1 lead at the half. Hal Fabris scored for Royals.

Noga scored the only goal of the second half.

George Steele of St. Andrews was carried off the field with most injuries halfway through the second half after a hard check by Dunn.

Land Minister E. T. Kenney said yesterday that the government has no intention of turning over the management of British Columbia forests to a commission.

The minister was answering demands of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association and the [illegible] Association who claimed it was the essential part of the Sloan report on forestry seven years ago.

Harold Soper, who is keeping alive the ancient craft of enameling at his home in the English county of Hampshire, engraves a heraldic stall plate for St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

Reviving The Ancient Art Of Enameling In England

By GUY LEONARD

It has happened in history that a new art form has sprung out of a minor craft that it has been developed as highly as skill and material will allow, and then the art dies. That is almost the whole story about the art of enameling. It was a native craft among Celtic peoples from the fifth century B.C. and specimens of the work then done survive to this day. The art spread over Europe through France, Germany, Italy and Spain, and examples have been found in [illegible] and the Levant.

[illegible] reached its [illegible] work done at Limoges in the second half of the [illegible] century. It was still later that the art spread to China and then to Japan where magnificent work was done at the beginning of the 19th [illegible]

HERALDIC PLATES

That is not the whole story of enameling, for it has been revived to some extent in Britain in recent years. It is just over 2,000 years since the Celtic peoples introduced [illegible]. Now it is being carried on in the face of considerable difficulties [illegible] two different firms. One [illegible] revival is [illegible]

[illegible]

University College [illegible] 1927. His is a tabernacle which was made to the order of the late Mr. Wilfred [illegible] who was [illegible] for the [illegible]

The firm which makes the heraldic plates [illegible] Mr. H. C. W. Soper and his daughter. Mr. Soper learnt the craft of enameling from his late father who had made research into the work of the medieval enamellers of Italy, France, Germany and England. Through this research Mr. Soper unearthed many of the secrets of the earlier enamelers which had been lost.

Making stained glass windows is another activity of the present Mr. Soper, who is now engaged on a four-panel window for a parish church in England.

HIGHLY SKILLED

Employing [illegible] the second firm are described as ecclesiastical goldsmiths. Highly skilled though his men are in working precious metal, W. H. Knight, head of the firm, finds it necessary to work [illegible] in base metals such as copper, brass and wrought iron in order to keep them together as a team. Several products of the skill of the firm are [illegible] Westminster Abbey [illegible]

EXPERIMENTAL FARM NOTES

The Largest of Tulip Bulbs Are Not Always Top Quality

Various Clans of Tall, Late Tulips.

MANY individuals have the mistaken idea that the best tulip bulbs to plant are the largest sizes obtainable. This is true only up to a point and after that there are good reasons for not planting the biggest. By planting tulip bulbs which are too large several things are likely to take place to reduce the quality and the general pleasing effect.

In the first place the largest bulbs do not result in the most uniform flowers and growth as is the case when moderate sizes are planted. Also, what often happens when planting so called jumbo, super or over-size tulips, i.e., bulbs measuring more than 13 centimeters in circumference (1⅝ to 1¾ inches in diameter) is that several flowers will develop on a plant with branched stems.

Sometimes there may be two or more single or imperfect flowers fused on a single item, or perhaps the petals will be partly green and joined to the top leaf resulting in a lopsided flower. Such lopsided green petaled blooms invariably break off due to the growth restriction. While the distorted flowers and uneven growth are not hereditary, the way to avoid such abnormalities is to plant moderately sized bulbs as such sizes are not so affected. Leave the jumbo-sized tulips to the bulb grower for propagation purposes. They are the best ones for his particular needs.

Next time when buying tulip bulbs be guided by the above facts and check the size for your specific requirements with the following table.

TABLE 1. BEST SIZES OF TULIPS FOR PLANTING OUTDOORS AND IN GREENHOUSES

Class and Variety	Outdoor (B.C. Coast Formal beds, under cutting for market)	Greenhouse Forcing (sizes here)
		Dec. and Jan. Flowering	Feb. and Mar. Flowering	Late March and April Flowering

Effect of Falling Raindrops

Beneficial effects of rain are well known, but soil damage from the force of falling raindrops is often overlooked.

The weight of water falling on an acre of land in an inch of rain is nearly 110 tons, points out Frederick Bisal of the Swift Current Soil Research Laboratory, and the drops striking bare soil, splash about 225 tons of clay or loam soil.

Water is as important as fertility for growing crops so it is essential to hold it where it falls. Experiments at the laboratory, says Mr. Bisal, show that an inch of rainfall on a bare clay or loam soil reduces the infiltration rate to approximately one-third of an inch an hour. If the rainfall is of greater intensity than this, the excess will become the runoff water. This runoff becomes very high during an intense rain, and is capable of carrying a great load of soil with consequent severe erosion.

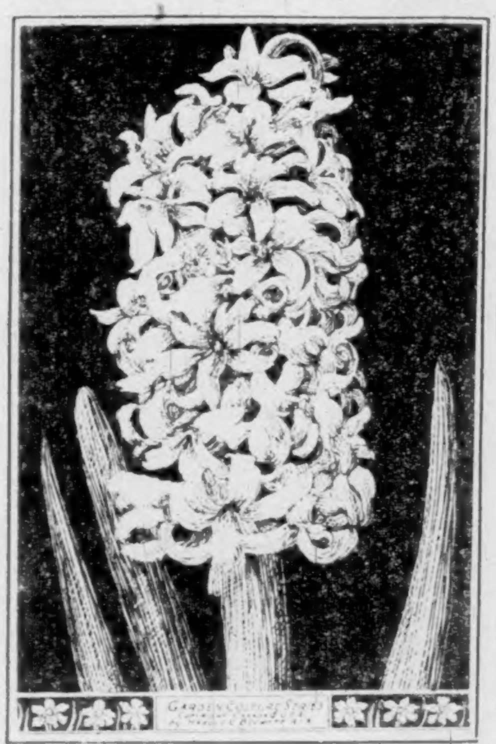
Nature's answer is a cushion of organic matter of plants or dead undercomposed plant material. This breaks the force of the falling raindrops and no soil is lost, but the water gently finds its way into the subsoil for storage and future use by growing crops.

The simplest way to save the soil and hold the rain where it falls is to protect the surface from the force of the raindrops with a suitable plant or straw mulch cover.

Reclaiming Desert

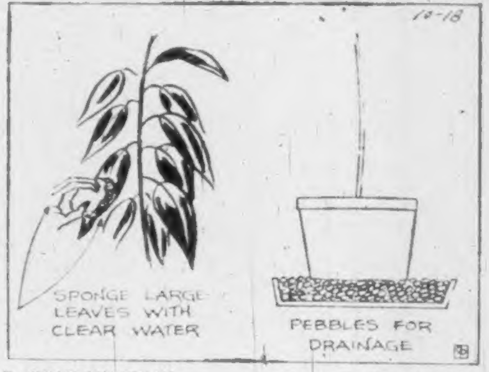
Efforts are being made in Saudi Arabia to extend the facilities of ancient irrigation systems by the use of modern irrigation techniques. However, water rights in this country are as intricate as the tunnels themselves which often cross one another at various levels and much of the government's trouble is to avoid infringing complex traditional customs. The new move is, however, important because agriculture in Saudi Arabia depends entirely on irrigation, and though the areas under cultivation are widely separated by desert, they can be extended by a more efficient distribution of water. Rains in the autumn and early winter, which are not allowed to escape into the salt mudflats on the coastal plain, will be controlled by dams.

Hyacinths for Early Spring



Dutch hyacinths are a lovely source of color and fragrance in the early spring garden. Striking color effects may be obtained by foreground groups in the shrub and perennial border. Blue and white varieties can be pleasingly combined with daffodils. Set the bulbs about 5 inches deep in well-drained soil and plant as previously described.

How to Keep House Plants Healthy



10-18
SPONGE LARGE LEAVES WITH CLEAR WATER
PEBBLES FOR DRAINAGE

By DEAN HALLIDAY

HOUSE plants can be spoiled much as children are spoiled. They can also be neglected, as some children are neglected. Like children, they must be washed "behind the ears;" they must be given enough water to drink, but not too much. The ill health of many house plants can be traced to over watering, as well as to lack of water.

As shown in the accompanying Garden-Graph, plants with large leaves, such as rubber plants and palms, should be wiped off with a sponge and clear water. This "washing behind the ears" will remove dust on the leaves which otherwise will prevent the plant from breathing properly.

The amount of water required by plants indoors during winter months is influenced largely by the humidity and the heat of the house. Remember, too, that growing plants, like ferns or begonias, will require more moisture than semi-dormant ones, like geraniums, crassulas or cacti.

If house plants are placed in the sun they will require more water than if in the shade. However, plants in glazed pots need less water than those in porous clay pots, because the latter evaporate much moisture.

There is a way to tell when potted plants need water. Pick up the pot and rap it with the knuckles. If the resulting sound is dull, the plant has sufficient water; if the pot rings, the plant is dry.

Many house plants become ill from "wet feet," because drainage has been neglected. Never let plants stand more than an hour or so in a water-filled saucer.

From My Organ Loft

BY GRAHAM STEED

IT WAS recently reported in this paper that Victorians were "apathetic to artists," and that unless there are better turnouts in future no more of these so called celebrities will condescend to visit us. The Organ Loft hardly knows whether to laugh or cry. A certain Mr. Pickett of Vancouver is quoted as having estimated that there are not more than 2,000 people in this city who care to hear great music or see great artists, but it seems that in spite of (or would it be more accurate to say because of) "reams of publicity" less than half of that number, a mere 900 or so, were present to applaud Mr. Laughton when he was recently at the Royal Theatre. The Organ Loft is surprised to find itself, for once, on the majority side of public opinion, admittedly only 1,100 strong, which has discovered by the elementary process of trial and error that "all that glisters is not gold."

* * *

I do not quarrel with Mr. Pickett on his estimate of 2,000 musical people. I think he is probably not very far wide of the mark, in fact he may err on the liberal side, for I have no recollection of any musical event in the last two seasons when 300 people have been refused admittance. On the other hand, local operatic ventures which run for thee or four evenings, do not usually lack patrons, so even this figure may be a gross underestimate. I feel strongly, however, that this gentleman may be less of an authority on such a questionable subject as what in fact constitutes great music, or even a great artist.

From there I would go on to express the opinion, for which I take full responsibility, that while undoubtedly many "big-name artists" (what a loathsome expression this is!) are presented by Famous Artists, very few of them purvey that particular commodity described as "great music." In my experience most of the fiddlers and pianists put on a display of technical fireworks which can only serve to discourage all but the most ambitious performers to pursue any further study of their instruments and seldom if ever warm the hearts of those who truly love music. They may throw in a Brahms sonata as a sop to Cerberus, but if they do it is usually vilely played and hastily passed over for something which requires mere finger agility and absolutely no mental effort whatsoever. And if they are singers they flaunt a contract with the Metropolitan Opera Company and proceed to exhibit their vocal prowess by trotting out the hoary pot-boilers which are painful enough in their proper context but are shameless impostures in a one-man show. They too pass off a group of Schubert or Wolf lieder and hope to placate the handful of people in the audience who are not impressed by the facial and laryngeal contortions indispensable to the simulation of operatic love.

Not all the celebrated soloists come under these categories. Solomon will not. Schnabel, whose recent death deprived us of one of the very greatest exponents of the works of Mozart and Beethoven, did not need to pander to a fireworks seeking gallery. Elizabeth Schumann would never for a moment jeopardise her future, or her reputation, by placing on her vocal cords a fraction of the strain which is borne every minute of their working hours by the would-be imitators of Caruso and other stars of the operatic firmament.

There are a number of great musicians living whose sole concern it is to interpret faithfully the compositions of the great masters without regard to their own personal aggrandizement, and oblivious of the desire of concert promoters to make them into "big-names," but unfortunately they are few and very far between. I think you will find Solomon to be arayed as one of these. I have heard him many times in the old country over a period of nearly a quarter of a century, for I was in my early teens the first time. He plays Schumann and Brahms with great understanding, and Beethoven with authority and a warmth of feeling by no means alien to the works of that volatile philosopher and genius, and whether he is playing alone or as a soloist with orchestra, one is never conscious of any mannerisms or affectations which so easily come between an audience and a composer. Go and hear him, regardless of Mr. Pickett.

* * *

Last year we had an opportunity to hear a work of Mozart's for solo violin, viola and orchestra. At the next concert you will be able to compare that work with one by Beethoven for orchestra and a trio of soloists, violin, cello and piano; the Triple Concerto, Opus 56. It is a splendid work, not perhaps so much in its own right, but as a study or training ground in which the composer solves to his satisfaction problems which had baffled him in earlier attempts with works for a less number of soloists, and wherein he lays a foundation for later and more important compositions. The problem is not so much how to employ soloists and orchestra to the best advantage but rather how to avoid that kind of writing which is very effective in a symphony.

A symphony can afford to be dramatic from its outset, for no one instrument is going to pop up later on and steal some of the thunder, but in a concerto the solo part must in a sense achieve its own effects at the expense of the orchestra. Do not for a moment imagine that Beethoven, or Mozart before him or Brahms afterwards, wrote concertos to show off their own skill as pianists against the most dazzling backcloth which can be provided for any solo artist, the full orchestra. Liszt, unfortunately, and many like him, did so, but not so the greater masters.

The true concept of concerto style is to be found in those works which "make the best effect expressible by opposed and unequal masses of instruments or voices." Not my words, but Tovey's, and if you think them over you will not be disappointed in what you hear. More about this next week.

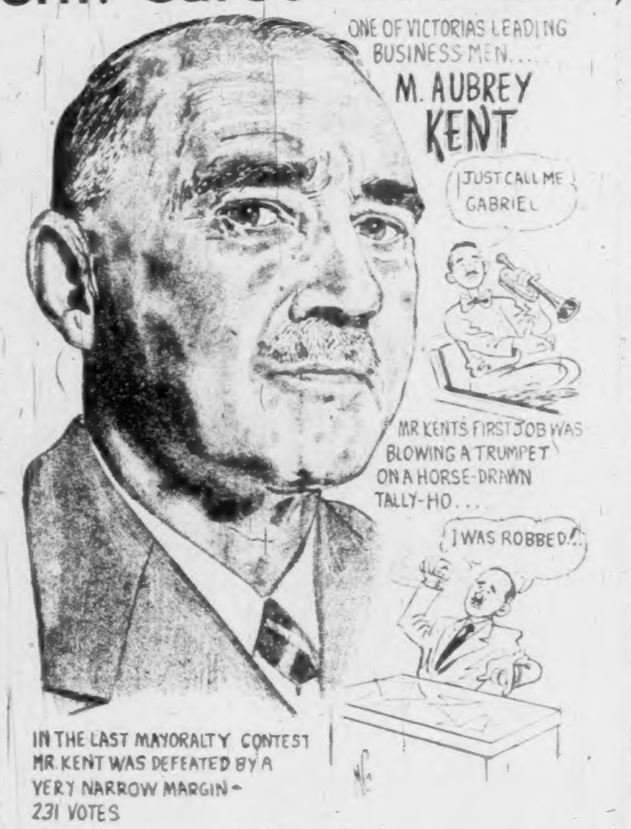
The Man of the Week

Aubrey Kent: Career of Music, Muskets

By G. E. MORTIMORE



ONE OF VICTORIA'S LEADING BUSINESS MEN....
M. AUBREY KENT
JUST CALL ME GABRIEL
MR. KENT'S FIRST JOB WAS BLOWING A TRUMPET ON A HORSE-DRAWN TALLY-HO...
I WAS ROBBED!
IN THE LAST MAYORALTY CONTEST MR. KENT WAS DEFEATED BY A VERY NARROW MARGIN — 231 VOTES

THE scion of a Victoria merchant family opened his working life with a flourish of the trumpet.

Marshall Aubrey Kent, whose seldom-used first name foreshadowed a noteworthy career in the army, blew those early trumpet notes in the unmilitary setting of a tourist tally-ho. He was paid $15 a month in school holidays to sit on the front seat of one of the big six-horse vehicles and serenade ships as they docked with a cargo of tourists.

His military career, which ran parallel to his civilian career in the music store which his grandfather founded, began at the age of 15. He joined the 5th Regiment, Canadian Garrison Artillery, and became personal trumpeter to Lieutenant-Colonel, later General Sir Arthur, Currie, commanding officer of the unit.

VICTORIA BORN

Trumpeter Kent was born in Victoria, the son of Herbert Kent. His father, now a white-haired stalwart old gentleman of 89, came to Victoria at the age of one year and is an authority on the history of the town. Aubrey Kent's late grandfather, Charles Kent, was city treasurer for 25 years.

He attended Central School and Victoria High, spending spare time in the store as a boy. Then he worked for North Pacific Express Company for a year and returned to work in the store until the outbreak of war in 1914.

Gaining his commission in the militia before the war, he went overseas with the artillery as a lieutenant, and served for three years in France, much of that time with the 39th Lethbridge Battalion. Once he wrote laconically to his parents as follows:

"I have been in the trenches observing the last few days and, as it has been raining hard lately, it is not very comfortable. Something like duck shooting at Cowichan, except that you are shooting and being shot at as well. I wear short length gum boots, tie sacks around my knees and wear a slicker coat, similar to the one I wear out shooting, so you can see that I am not always dressed in ice cream pants as in pictures."

WAR PROMOTION

Coming home with the rank of captain, he took up his old associations with the 5th B.C. Coast Brigade, as it was then called. Military matters, parades, training camps took up much of his time between wars. From 1931 to 1933 he commanded the regiment. However, he never uses the title of lieutenant-colonel now.

Meanwhile he carried on with his civilian job, having been made manager of the store when the war ended.

The store, which is one of the oldest businesses in Victoria to remain continuously in the hands of one family, was founded in 1862 by Mr. Kent's grandfather on his mother's side, M. W. Waitt. It was called M. W. Waitt and Co.

From early days the store handled bicycles, sporting goods and several other commodities as well as pianos and other musical instruments. Mr. Kent recalls the first gramophone in stock. It had rubber tubes to carry the sound to the ears. When the store put one of the machines in its doorway, Indians congregated to hear it.

NAME OF KENT

The firm took the name of Kent's in 1913. (However, Mr. Kent senior had been running it for many years before that time.) The firm established a Vancouver store, which was run by one of Mr. Kent's two brothers. In 1928 Mr. Kent bought a controlling interest in the Victoria store. The Vancouver store was later wound up.

Mr. Kent is now president of Kent's, Ltd. His father, retired, remains a director.

In 1941 the army called him up, and he served as officer commanding the artillery officers' training centre at Gordon Head, then as G.S.O.2 at Petawawa. For the last two years of the war he was on the officers' survey board, Western Canada.

IN CIVIC POLITICS

His career in civic politics began in 1947 when he was elected alderman at the head of the polls. In 1949 he ran for mayor. Percy George edged him out by 231 votes in a total vote of more than 8,000.

He was elected alderman again in 1950 after a year on the sidelines. In a very close finish he was elected third on the aldermanic list to Dr. J. D. Hunter and Miss Hilda Baxter (now Dr. and Mrs. Hunter).

In 10 days' time he will take another try for the mayoral chair which he came so close to occupying in 1949.

Rowing was Mr. Kent's specialty in his athletic days. He was a member of the J.B.A.A. He rowed principally in the doubles at Portland, Nelson, Vancouver and Victoria. With the late Hugh McLaren, he won the junior and senior doubles at Shawnigan Lake in 1920.

Now he likes to go fishing and shooting. He has abandoned the fly-rod, but he keeps a launch at Canoe Cove for his salmon fishing.

His son, "Barney" Kent, works in the store. His daughter, Mrs. Beverley Christmas, is the wife of a wing-commander in the R.C.A.F. stationed in Eastern Canada.

KENT—THE MAN

Aubrey Kent is erect, somewhat on the slender side, carefully groomed and a shade austere in manner. He is somewhat sensitive about his thinning hair, and camouflages it with skilful brushing.

He prefers not to speak of his army career, but certain military attitudes are second nature to him. To the army one can probably ascribe his liking for order, neatness, discipline and a measure of centralized control. Yet he does not have the rigid subservience to rules found among some officers of the regular army. He never forgot he was a civilian as well.

In 1935, when he commanded the 5th Regiment, he wrote a closely reasoned and intelligent article for The Colonist magazine on coast defences and the need for preparedness. It drew a rebuke from national defense headquarters—security officers alleged that it broke regulations covering discussion of military information. However, a layman can see no exposure of secret information in it. The matter blew over.

Social [illegible] [illegible] Aubrey Kent's background: family, army, and business. An honest observer might say his bearing has that of a successful man conscious of his worth. But friends reply that his apparent surface chill melts after the first meeting.

A GOOD FRIEND

"He is very unassuming," one friend said. "Sometimes he strikes strangers as being cold and aloof, but that is a wrong impression. He is one of the most perfect hosts you could find. A game dinner at his place is something to remember.

"He's very much a man's man—a hunter and a fisherman. Every week-end, when he can make it, he's out duck-hunting. He has many friends in sports and business. He has an analytical mind and plenty of business experience. My personal opinion is that the business men will get behind him."

Newspapermen are not unanimous in admiration of Mr. Kent. He has quite frequently called down Victoria reporters for alleged misquotation, and they feel that the charge has not always been justified.

But he is certainly an able businessman with a flair for administration. He was an early advocate of the city manager system and helped pilot it through.

"You have no idea," interrupted Marius, "how popular I am in Italy. Last time I was in Rome, I went for a walk and wishing for some privacy, I pulled my cap down, almost hiding my face. Then I saw a carriage with a priest dressed in white riding in it. It was the Pope. I hadn't recognized him, but he spotted me all right.

"'Good day, Monsieur Marius,' he said, 'I am so glad to see you.'

Winning a World's Lacrosse Series

Teamwork On and Off the Field Was the Secret of the Success of the Victoria Lacrosse Club In 1919 When Those Amateurs Won the Mann Cup at Winnipeg

By FRANK KELLEY

The team as it looked in June, 1919, at Royal Athletic Park.

MAYBE not so temperamental as theatrical folk, it has nevertheless been agreed that baseball, lacrosse and hockey players, professional or amateur, respond readily to a bit of well-timed "jollying" or a slice of social relaxation cake cut especially for them, just as much as any other group of mortals might do.

Catering a bit to an athlete's own appraisal of his prowess has a lot to do with the making of championship teams, especially if the mediums adopted are not of too flowery a pattern. Stating this much, I have in mind what was accomplished by the Foundation Lacrosse Club when it won the Mann Cup at Winnipeg in 1919, the only occasion on which a Victoria organization captured the coveted cup for amateur lacrosse.

BUILDING TEAM

Briefly, when I was identified with the publication of the plant paper, Foundation Shipbuilder, and the industrial relations set-up when the company built 20 vessels at Tacoma for the French government, it was decided that a further contract for another 20 craft was undertaken for Victoria a much more ambitious program would be attempted.

Figuring in the original plans, as the first keels were laid at Point Ellice, I was sent to Victoria to assist with as little aggressiveness as possible on my part, to promote a plant organization such as had proved so successful at Tacoma, and which would cater to the social and athletic preference of Victoria workers.

WITH MUSIC, TOO

A big feature of the Tacoma set-up was the formation of a 50-piece band, which played daily during the noon hour in the yard and on Sundays in the parks. Another feature, which gave the workers something to talk about and forget the tempo of the job, was the performance of the Tacoma professional baseball club, which had been absorbed in its entirety and the players put to work.

Other athletic interests were catered to; but not on the scale pursued in Victoria. Here they were not a sport overlooked. Baseball, hockey, lacrosse, football and cricket were represented by teams. There was a swimming pavilion at the Gorge and a clubhouse between Point Hope and Point Ellice units for gymnastic and boxing exhibitions, with plenty of floor space for a flock of dancers.

VALUE OF PLAN

There were benefit funds. "Passing of the hat" was taboo when accidents happened. The whole proved good sense industrially; for there was not a record made in the wooden shipbuilding effort of all America that was not equalled or bettered in the Victoria yards. From its inception, the Foundation set-up proved the great value of teamwork in an industrial effort as well as demonstrated its importance in the winning of competitive trophies.

Foundation organizations became noted for the part played in the promotion of sports, with each director on its board of management directly responsible for the showing of his particular unit, and indirectly for all activities. The lacrosse team was my concern. The team won the Kirmarnock Cup, emblematic of the B.C. championship, and was destined to figure in the greatest lacrosse tournament in the history of the game and come out of it the undisputed winner of the world championship.

THE GOLD CUP

As old lacrosse followers will remember, there were arguments plus over the status of the gold trophy for some time prior to the suggestion of the Manitoba champions that a real tournament be held at Winnipeg at which the rightful holder could be determined. This was welcomed and championship teams from British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario participated.

Fortunately we had been able to keep on fielding really brilliant amateur lacrosse players throughout the 1919 season. Most of them were employed on shipbuilding work but we managed to hold a few more, with gainful employment elsewhere, to play for the team. It proved a great experience, helping to build that organization. The attention extended individual members had considerable to do with the winning of the world championship that year.

FINE ATHLETES

There was never a Sunday when the players, their families and friends, did not enjoy an outing at Shawnigan Lake, Goldstream or some other location, or be guests on yachting expeditions in nearby waters. It all helped to promote team work, which is what wins at work or play. At that the Foundation Lacrosse Club was made up of as fine a group of Canadian athletes as one would want to meet. They played the game, always, and when they promised on the train going east they would tend strictly to training until the tournament was over, there was never any doubt what the outcome would be.

That team, working under the able direction of Ed. (Cotton) Brynjolfson, with trainers Drivers and Hamilton, comprised Jake Davis, Bernie [illegible], Allie McGregor, Angie McInnes, Johnny Johnson, Joe Mitchell, Cyril Baker, Stan Ross, Ernie Munro, Fritz Kroeger, Archie Clegg, Frank Sweeney, Joe Painter and "Sugar" McDougall.

The Man With a Tin Canoe

By LEONARD KNOTT

Since the discovery of western Canada there have been two ways of reaching the plains. Traders and adventurers from France came by way of the St. Lawrence River and the Great Lakes through the Lake of the Woods to Lake Winnipeg and the Red River. The men of the Hudson's Bay Company sailed north to Hudson Bay, then landed at York Factory or Fort Churchill and traveled by York boats up the Nelson River to Lake Winnipeg. At the northern end of the lake they built a post which they called Norway House, and it was here that the traders met the man with the tin canoe.

James Evans was a Methodist missionary. He arrived at Norway House in 1840. In Ontario, before going to the west, he had traveled down the Thames River from London to St. Clair Lake on a raft with a cabin on top. On the western plains he had used a dog team which was half wolf. But his greatest invention was his tin canoe.

FIXING LEAKS

Donald Ross, chief factor at Norway House, refused to travel in Evans's strange craft and called it a [illegible] [illegible]. But Evans [illegible] paddled his canoe [illegible] across northern Canada to the Rocky Mountains and back. He carried with him a [illegible] to make repairs, and the Indians [illegible] [illegible] by the canoe, which they called an "Island of Light."

All across the northwest white men and red men talked of the missionary and his strange canoe, but Evans became famous for something even stranger than that. He made the birchbark talk.

When Evans first started teaching the Indians they had no written language. Night after night he worked in his tent or cabin until he had completed an alphabet for the Swampy Crees. Using this alphabet and writing on birchbark with bits of charcoal he taught the Indians to read and write.

TYPE OF METAL

Evans did not think this was enough, however. He wanted the Indians to have books written in their own language. There were no printers in the northwest, so he decided to become a printer himself. First he took pieces of wood and carved letters on them. Then he melted lead from bullets and the linings of tea chests and made metal type. For ink he scraped soot from the chimney and mixed it with fish oil. For a press he used the fur baler, a [illegible] that was used by the traders to press fur bundles together to [illegible] in the canoes.

With this primitive equipment the man with the tin canoe printed [illegible] of a [illegible] all printed on birchbark. A few copies still exist today in the [illegible] Toronto.

BOOKS

By W. T. GALT

If someone doesn't give you a book for Christmas this year, it can only mean that one of the book industry's most dynamic selling campaigns has misfired.

Christmas has always been a big time for book publishers, but this year they're out to make it even bigger, and if they thought that they could get away with having Santa's name changed to Lloyd C. Douglas or John P. Marquand they'd probably have a crack at that, too.

The pubishers are charging headlong into a battle with other time-honored Christmas gifts.

Many big companies have large Christmas lists. But for years they've been handing out prosaic things like Scotch whisky, perfume, chocolates, cigars, cigarettes and date books.

The campaign to get executives and just about everyone else, to give books this year has got off to a flashy start.

The famous bookstore, Brentano's, on New York's Fifth Avenue, startled the book world by making plans for its Christmas offensive public way back in the summer months.

They will take out 17 full pages in one mammoth Christmas edition of the Saturday Review of Literature in what they describe as the biggest book merchandising coup in history.

Besides that, they'll take out additional multi-page spreads in other slick magazines that are apt to be read by the type of person who would give a book for Christmas.

Doubleday Bookshops in New York will not be outdone.

Determined to make this a literary Christmas or bust, they have hired a couple of Conover models.

According to a Doubleday spokesman, the girls are chosen for "intelligence as well as pulchritude."

The plan is that these girls, armed with their natural "pulchritude" and a stack of Doubleday specials, will call on New York's business executives in a personal campaign to get them to give books for Christmas.

Other publishers are advertising their wares in financial newspapers and other places not usually known for their plethora of book advertising.

Hapless Letty Had No Clue How to Pen a Verse or Two

"Letty Landon," by Helen Ashton (Collins, $2.75.)

That rare thing, a biography of an unsuccessful woman, has been accomplished successfully by Helen Ashton in this story about the hapless poetess Letty Landon, who wrote in pale imitation of Lord Byron.

When Letty first begins to rhyme off her jingles about lovely ladies and gallant knights, literary ladies were still rather rare and she became fashionable as a person but was never destined, as the critics of the day suggested, to achieve fame as an author.

But Letty, once having been fashionable, dutifully ground out her pallid poems until her brief, tragic marriage to George McLean, Governor of the Gold Coast Colonies.

Miss Ashton, an astute student of London and literary life in Letty's day (the middle 19th century), treats the rash, unhappy Letty with compassion and skill. —M.D.G.

Dominating Neurotic Comes To Terms With Her Sister

"The Woman at the Window," by Nelia Gardner White (Macmillan, $4.)

With the exception of bosomy women who provide the love interest in historical novels there's hardly a literary heroine today who doesn't need to be gently unraveled by a psychiatrist.

And among the most neurotic of them all are the mixed-up young ladies, usually cripples, who appear in the pages written by Nelia Gardner White.

In Miss White's latest, the lady of the title is a beautiful cripple who likes to dominate the people around her, particularly her youngest sister who is driven by conscience into dropping her own life to look after her.

After an endless probing of emotions and motives, the two ladies finally settle things between them. —M.D.G.

Cowhands Without Tears

"Cowboy Yarns for Young Folk," by Kerry Wood (Copp, Clark, $2.50.)

Cowboys as they really are in the Alberta foothills ride through this book. The well-known radio story-teller takes young readers on roundups and gives them a taste of the ballyhoo and thrill of rodeos.

There are no phony stage coach holdups, no blazing six-guns that fire eight shots, and no glorified killers living in an age when Doc Colt was the only law and "good guys and bad guys" the only people. —J.R.A.

Rough Times In Australia

"Here In Eden," by Kathleen Lindsay (Ryerson, $2.50.)

Scrambling almost endlessly through Australia's history, and over her geography, this book manages to cover a great variety of harrowing occurences without anyone, the reader least of all, getting very excited about it.

The opening chapter finds a beautiful girl fleeing penal servitude and a rich persecutor in a long-boat with five men and a boy. One by one they die of thirst or exposure, until she finds herself fighting off the advances of the last, ape-like, male survivor.

But land appears in time to distract him, and she escapes into the bush, pausing only to bear a child in the arms of a sheep herder who happens to hear her moans. This sort of thing goes on for 296 pages. J.W.C.

Basic Forces Dominate Brazil Novel

"Time and the Wind," by Erico Verissimo. (Macmillans, $5.95.)

Elemental forces dominate this novel of the formative, war torn years in the history of Brazil from the late eighteenth through the nineteenth century.

This work by Erico Verissimo, one of Brazil's literary giants, is powerful and blunt in its approach, although often tedious.

In its heavy interlocking of events and characters, its flashback technique and its detailed devglopment of people and events, "Time and the Wind" does a magnificent job that is worth wading through more than 600 pages to complete.

LINKS FAMILIES

The author has done an outstanding job in cataloguing and weaving together the lives of two families, the Terras and the Cambaras.

Privation, danger, uncertainty, hunger, lust, fear, loneliness, pride, bravery and greed all march across the pages of this novel.

The characterizations are excellent, indeed brilliant, and the motivation detailed. Historical background, too, is well sketched. These factors are the strong points of the novel. From this strength grow the weaknesses, principally the feeling that the main story is frequently laboring to pull through the maze of detail.

The plot begins with the birth of a half-breed boy, Pedro, in the mission hospital of the Seven Towns. His son by Ana Terra—Pedro Terra—establishes the line of the first family in the main thread of the story. When the handsome, dashing Captain Rodrigo Cambara sweeps Ana's granddaughter, Bibiana, off her feet, the two families are brought together.

FEUD STARTS

At this time, also, the feud between the Cambaras and the powerful Amaral family enters the picture.

With the wars against the Indians and the Spanish, the establishment of the republic, the revolution, and the family feuds, there is ample action in the novel.

Verissimo, already known for his fine novels and translation of English novels into Portuguese, introduces some of his chapters with blank verse that adds considerably to the charm of the novel.

The translation into English is by L. L. Barrett. —F.C.B.

Glitter-Trimmed Costumes May Now Go Into the Suds

By BETH BLAIR

Time was when the glitter-trimmed items in your wardrobe appeared only on special occasions. But today there's practicality as well as magic in the fashion field. Sweaters and stockings are wearing jewels and still going into the suds, and many blouses are sparkling with metallic threads that team with soap and water.

Your prettiest things can now become your most practical ones, if you know the simple rules for sudsing them out for daily freshness and chic.

Blouse care depends on the fabric, so keep track of tags that tell you what you're buying. You can toss cottons into soapsuds without fear. If they're metallic-striped or gold-printed, treat them like a fine fabric with lukewarm suds and rinses, gentle handling, and light ironing. Rayon and silk crepes, and all types of jersey also need the fine fabric treatment.

WATCH FOR SAG

Remember to support crepes and jerseys with your hands while sudsing and rinsing. They may sag if you let the weight of the water pull them down. Have an old soft brush around for use on soiled spots. Rubbing fine fabrics together to get rid of soiled spots is injurious to the fibers. Two quick sudsings are better than one if you've worn the blouse once too often. Lay jerseys flat to dry.

Prints may "bleed" but usually this is only excess dye. Quick washing is the trick here. Roll the blouse in an old towel to pat out excess moisture, and hang on a hanger immediately. Shake well to keep the fabric from clinging. Silk and rayon prints can be ironed after a very short drying time. Jerseys should be spread flat to dry.

A professional blouse ironing job goes like this: Press armhole seams, then sleeves. Next the left front, back, and right front. Last, yoke and collar, if any. Place the freshly ironed blouse on a hanger and button it up. Watch your ironing heats: low for rayon, nylon and silk.

Glamour sweaters that vie with Cinderella's ball gown are now in the stores. A good cashmere or fine wool sweater always responds to proper washing technique, and this is just as true for those that are now showing up with woven gold threads or designs of sparkling rhinestones, drop crystals and pearls.

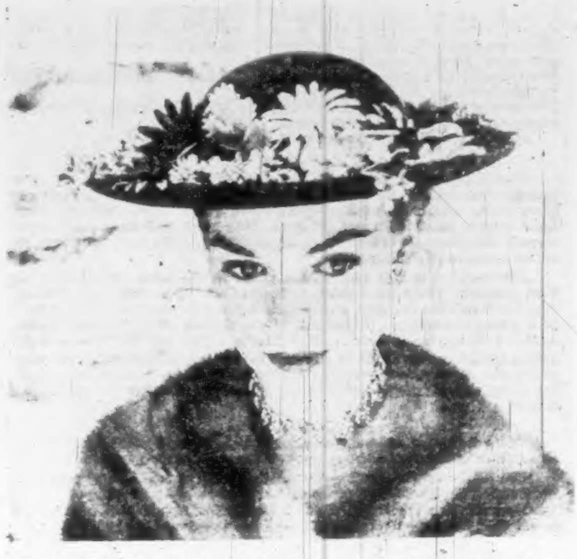
QUICK SUDSINGS

A quick sudsing in lukewarm soapsuds, and quick rinsings, are called for. Support the sweater with the hands, pat it gently, and squeeze (do not wring), let it dry flat on a towel, and you'll find you can shape it to your fit. If you want to be scientifically sure of getting it back to size, outline it with pencil on a cardboard before washing. Then pat it out to fit the outline and let it dry on the cardboard, with a towel underneath to catch dampness. You can also cut the cardboard into sleeves and body frames and insert them in the sweater as a drying form. Or you can buy a wire frame for drying sweaters and adjust to your size. But with good wool and careful washing, a sweater dries to shape just as well if laid flat and patted to measure.

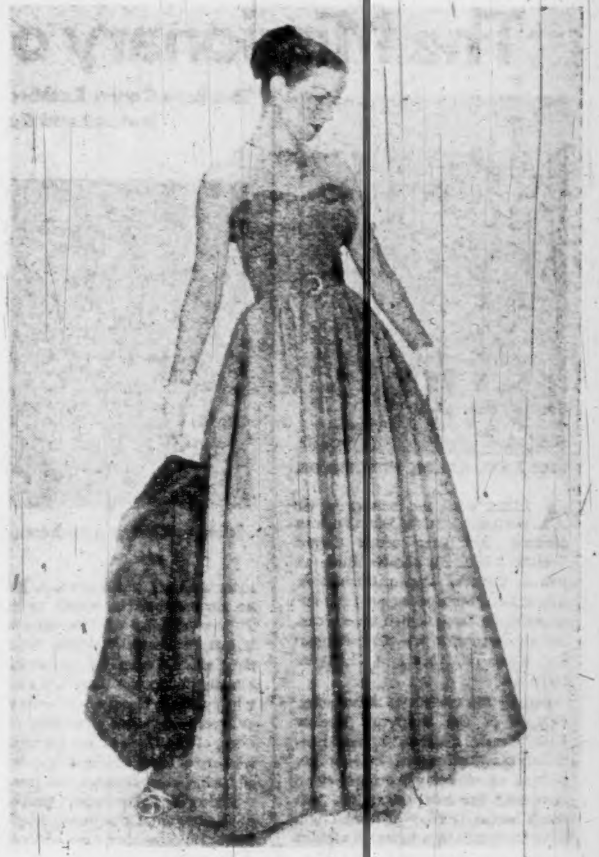
New Styles In Blouses

Blouses have earned the important place they hold in fall wardrobes. They have more virtues each season, and are in a greater variety. Designers now cut them to fit better; they are long enough and are shaped in the waistline so that they stay inside skirts and are not bulky under jackets and coats. If they are for dress-up and cut low in the neck, they are shaped and fitted so that you're as neat as if you wore a dress.

In addition to their practical features, they are in so many fabrics and styles that there's a blouse for every need, every occasion. Favorites for daytime are cottons and wool jerseys, made so that they give a dress look when teamed with the right skirt. The jersey blouses conform to the "sweater look" that is so popular, and offer the utmost in comfort, smartness and wearability.



Walter Florell creates a festive Breton of steel grey velours. A garland of gold and russet velvet flowers, metallic gold leaves and silver balls is tucked into the smooth curve of the brim.



Charming from every angle is this strapless evening gown of exotic blue taffeta moire, a perfect choice for glittering holiday evenings. The smoothly-fitted bodice is cleverly styled and cut to dip slightly at the front and create a pretty feminine rounded line. Crinoline petticoats show to advantage the beautifully flared skirt. Good news for the home seamstress is the faille taffeta moire which is available in 10 colors, as well as black and white, at local sewing centres. There you can have the belt covered in self fabric also.

Glamorous Holiday Hats Matching Simple Clothes

By ANNE YATES CLARKE

Clothes are elegant, feminine and flattering this season but they are simple. Your loveliest dresses need the help of accessories to look their best—most of them were designed with the idea that the glitter and sometimes the color would be added in accessories. And so the milliners, the designers of shoes, jewelry and gloves have outdone themselves to give us the most interesting and flattering accessories that we have had in decades—perhaps that we have ever had.

Although there's enough variety in hats to provide an entirely different style for every woman—for every costume in her wardrobe if she wants it—the dress-up holiday hats fall into two general classes. There are small hats for dancing and the theatre, and there are wide-brimmed dramatic hats that will double the glamour of the woman sitting across a restaurant table. The large hats are usually fairly simple, making the most of a sweeping brim, perhaps a feather and a bit of glitter. Few men can resist them.

THE SMALL HAT

The small hats, on the other hand, are bright as the lights of the evening. They are made of shimmering materials or they flash with metallic embroidery, sequins or beads. The shapes are varied to flatter the face and to go with the new coiffures. While many take the new level line across the brow, others dip far to the side. Caps are cut in deep points or clinging curves, and many are high in the back to allow for your chignon or bun.

Feathers and veils are used less than they were last year, but they mean more—they are planned especially for the hat, the feathers filling out the silhouette or the veil merely covering the eyes or the mouth.

The Missionary of the Northern Cross

The Late Canon Rushbrook Sailed the North Coast and Learned a Lot of Things About the Natives and Carried the Word of God to Those Isolated From Civilization

By VIOLET SEAMAN

THE LATE CANON RUSHBROOK

Seaweed laden with herring spawn hung to dry on clothes lines at Kitkatla.

A LINK with the history of northern British Columbia was severed this year when Canon Walter Field Rushbrook died at Prince Rupert. Canon Rushbrook might have been called an amateur scientist, anthropologist, student of history, gardener and housekeeper but, above all, he was a Christian minister.

During his travels as missionary skipper of the Anglican mission boat "Northern Cross," he made detailed observations of herring activities on the north coast their spawning grounds migration, seasonal habits, fertility of spawn, etc. - and was told by a fisheries official to mind his own business. He saw the herring so thick in Prince Rupert harbor that boats could scarcely enter. He watched great nets draw hundreds of tons of these fish from the same waters.

OF NATIVE LIFE

As he followed his schedule from harbor to harbor for 17 years, he studied the native life to which he ministered. He watched Indian children play with a baby seal as with a doll (mother seals, too, were often speared for their pelts). When an Indian mother died Canon Rushbrook saw the "nurse" chew dried herring spawn together with bits of inner bark from the hemlock (prepared in spring for such emergencies), then funnel the predigested mass into the infant's mouth.

He visited the "Cave of Sickness," south of Stewart, where mummified bodies had been placed and the cracks in the cave walls filled with stones and yew wood spear points. At Kitkatla whose shore is bathed by Pacific rollers, the missionary found the natives hanging their herring spawn covered kelp on ropes like clothes on a line, to sun-dry it before storing it in boxes for the winter.

At Port Essington at the mouth of the Skeena River, he took a picture of a 60-foot Indian war canoe with a family of 10 or 12 people in it, laden with household goods and supplies, about to be poled and hauled up the treacherous Skeena — destination Hazelton.

STRANGE THINGS

From the natives, the keen young minister learned many legends which he carefully recorded, but the records were later lost in fire. Those he remembered he wrote or told. They were tales of "The man who fell from heaven," whose imprint may still be seen on an island in Metlakatla Pass, of We-get, the spirit who ruled the Nass; of the tribe who believed they were descended from dogs, of the souls of the porcupines why cry at night at Cloyah Bay when the wind runs through the trees.

Walter Field Rushbrook was born at Burlington, Ontario, on Aug. 12, 1868. He came west as a missionary to Port Essington, in 1905. Three denominations are holding services there Salvation Army, Methodist and Anglican. Week-ends saw score of boats gathered at the river port. The river-boats Hazelton, Mount Royal and Pheasant were kept busy on the Skeena between Essington and Hazelton.

FIRST SERVICE

In 1909 in a tent Mr. Rushbrook held his first service in the new Prince Rupert and that day he recalled the harbor was full of whales. During 1910 and 1911 he spent several months as missionary among the Grand Trunk Pacific construction camps near Hazelton. But it was the period between 1912 and 1929 that he was appointed (at his own request) to coast mission work and became skipper of the Northern Cross. His service was, in itself, a clear illustration of Christ's "second mile" parable.

On Porcher Island, off British Columbia's north coast where there were about 400 post office addresses in 1912, the missionary set out experimental plots, having obtained what literature he could on cultivation of muskeg lands. He taught the fishing families how to grow good potatoes, cabbage, carrots, turnips and more besides. At lonely light stations he not only held services, but brought mail, reading material and sometimes poultry, too. Once he and his engineer carried an obstreperous billy goat to a miner at Alice Arm, then found he had to take the creature to Arrandale on the Nass.

HELP IN TIME

When accidents befell or illness occurred, the Northern Cross hurried to give aid. Once the mission boat had a tough time pushing up the Portland Canal against freezing slush to rescue two men from a small open boat almost frozen fast. The men were at the point of exhaustion. And more than once the missionary skipper had to bring in a wife, lonely to near madness, from a remote shack, where her fisherman husband left her in solitude for weeks.

The minister visited small mines in the mountains. He saw the mules go into Alice Arm with supplies and return with bags of ore the Rawhide Trail they called it.

TEACHING YOUNG

There was no end to the stories Canon Rushbrook could tell. He had an alert mind and a keen memory. For years after he retired from the Northern Cross he took charge of young people's work at the little St. Peter's church on the outskirts of Prince Rupert. Literally hundreds of young people passed through his classes and they came from the farthest ends of the city to attend.

Almost to the last one could visit the beloved missionary then in his eighties, and enjoy a splendid home-cooked meal with pickles, fruit and vegetables grown and canned by himself, and more than likely the guest would leave with a generous bouquet of seasonable flowers from his garden. And more than all was the spiritual uplift generated from an hour or two in the company of one of God's men.

HARBOR LIGHTS

BY—RAY WORMALD

CAPT. MICHAEL KIELLY

ALL OF Capt. Michael Kielly's 77 years have been spent on or by the sea. Even today much of his time is spent in close association with ships and the waterfront standing watch through hours of darkness at the new plant of the Fishermen's Co-operative Association at the foot of Erie Street.

It's a safe bet that the captain's thoughts oft-times drift back over the years to voyages and adventures of many years ago.

*

Capt. Kielly is a native of Carbonear, Newfoundland, and his seagoing career commenced from that small settlement. He was 14 when he left the classrooms and got his first job aboard a small coastal schooner. Later he served aboard the square rigger Emulator, carrying fish from Newfoundland to Portugal. After several trips in that ship he joined a Nova Scotia schooner which was to provide his first and only shipwreck. She sprung a serious leak in the Caribbean Sea and almost sank before being purposely grounded on a small island.

All six men of the 90-tonner reached shore safely.

★ ★ ★

Working his way to New York, the captain served aboard an American freighter out of that port for a short time. In 1898 he left that big city for Hong Kong aboard the full rigged sailing vessel John Courier. That was quite a trip. It lasted a full 187 days, "and in all that time we sighted land on only one day. We rode out some pretty fierce storms." The ship carried oil, in cases, to the Chinese port.

He returned to this part of the world in the same ship, leaving her at Port Angeles. For a short while he worked aboard a small ferry linking Port Angeles and Victoria, then entered the halibut fishery out of Seattle. "The boat I was in was one of eight halibutters fishing out of Seattle. There were no B.C. halibut vessels then . . . that was in days when the fishermen got one cent a pound for his fish." Later he made Prince Rupert his home port, and fished out of that northern city until 1930 when he became associated with the Co-op organization then known as Kyuquot Trollers' Co-operative Association.

★ ★ ★

From that time until his semi-retirement several years ago, Capt. Kielly served as master aboard the company's big packers Co-operators I, III and IV.

From its early beginning Capt. Kielly has watched the halibut fishery of the Pacific Northwest grow to its present gigantic proportion. Today hundreds of men are engaged in that branch of the fishing industry, and it is one that holds an important place in the economy of the province.

The captain and his wife live at 1717 Lea Avenue, and most fine afternoons find him busy in his garden.

When a fellow spends all his life with the sea, it's no easy task to make a complete break from it. His part-time job down at the company docks provide a fill for what would otherwise be a wide gap.

Notes From a Naval Scrapbook

By
CAPTAIN H. KINGSLEY
R.C.N. (Retired)

Thirty-four and a half years in the Naval Service of Canada is by no means a record. There are some who have served longer and most of their careers have been more spectacular, but the greater part of any such career is bound to be taken up with the daily round, the common task, and it is only occasionally that an episode worthy of record seems to occur. I shall therefore endeavor to pick out certain episodes as they appeared to me at the time, in the hope that it will prove more interesting reading, and convey a general impression of life in the Canadian Navy over all but six years of its history.

Naval full dress worn at Royal Review.

AS I SIT in the comfort of my own home, and enjoy the security of a modest pension, the first thought that comes to me is what a long way we have traveled towards building up for ourselves the nucleus of an efficient service in this country with the attendant benefits such as pension, marriage allowance, subsistance, transportation for dependents, and now a housing scheme, which the navy of today enjoys. These things have only come gradually, and usually long after the other armed forces have received them.

BETWEEN WARS

Between the wars, the navy received little encouragement and much opposition; in fact, in 1921 there was one day when officially, there was no navy at all. I was not in this country at the time, but understand it was when Admiral Sir Charles Kingsmill resigned over the reduction proposed. Commodore Walter Hose succeeded him and things looked so bad that he advised all my term who returned to Canada, to get out. All but four of them did, and thus were lost to the service when badly needed in 1939.

The future was, however, a closed book to us, when in that hot summer of 1916 I boarded the C.P.R. train out of Vancouver, with my regulation clothing packed safely in a trunk. It was with a certain amount of trepidation that I saw my parents left behind, waving bravely, and the familiar scenes vanish, as the train drew slowly out to the cry of "all aboard."

I believe it was that year that there were great forest fires in Western Ontario and for a day and a night, the glow could be seen and the sky was blackened as we trundled slowly east.

ON WAY EASTWARD

Other cadets joined the train as we progressed east and we struck up acquaintances with each other, which in some cases were destined to be lasting friendships. We had no uniforms as yet, and so it was a case of talking to any boy of the same age (14 to 16). In some cases we made mistakes and once or twice got the "brush off" from a senior, who let it be known by his manner that he was a superior being, one not to be spoken to lightly by "junior warts."

At Montreal, one had to change trains, and we boarded the old Intercolonial Railway for the last 800 jerky and bumpy miles to Halifax. I remember this train used to stop with such an application of the brakes that it was impossible to even drink a cup of coffee without being in danger of finding the contents outside instead of inside. This is just what happened to one, Teddy Orde, who was sitting in the diner, and had not then been identified as belonging to our particular class of young ruffians. His discomfiture caused his future messmates much ribald amusement.

AT NAVAL COLLEGE

The arrival at Halifax was not impressive, for this was at the old North Street station, since the new ocean terminals were only in the process of being built in the summer of 1916.

The college, it was called the Royal Naval College of Canada then, was not impressive either, being an old red brick two and one-half-story building inside the north gate of the dockyard. This was about 200 yards further south than the present north gate, and as the main station was just outside, we benefited from the noise and fumes both by day and by night.

The fact that H.M.C.S. Niobe was alongside, just below, failed to raise our spirits, for she was completely immobilized, with cables out fore and aft, and even a sort, of hut built up amidships for classrooms.

This old stager had done yeoman service at the outbreak of the First World War, capturing more ships than any other, by lying outside New York for several months and nabbing all unwary Hun base stealers, trying for a home run.

FOR THREE YEARS

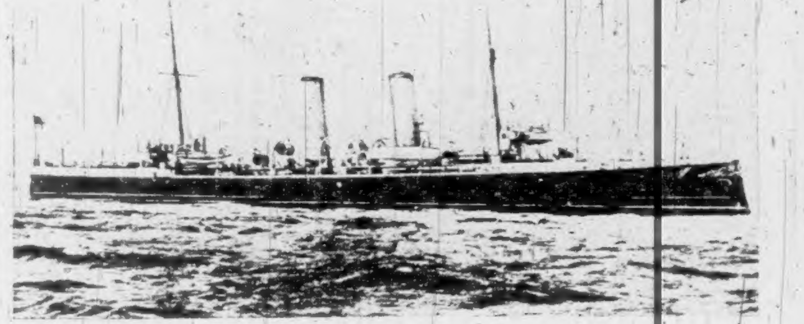
There was a Canadian seagoing navy of small ships, but we didn't see it. The Rainbow, our other light cruiser, was laid up in Esquimalt.

All very depressing to young hopefuls, but we did see plenty of the old cruisers of the North Atlantic Squadron of the Royal Navy.

Cadets joined the college (which was started in 1911) once a year, and the course was three years. This was shortened for most of the 1914-18 war, to about two and one-half years, but in our case we were delayed by the upheaval following the great Halifax explosion of 1917, of which more later.

From the senior terms, were chosen cadet captains; they were our fathers and mothers, and principal taskmasters.

We were no doubt a funny looking crew, wearing whatever our parents had provided us with, and my straw hat lasted just about one full day.



H.M.C.S. Rainbow.

The chief cadet captain was Pip Musgrave (now acting captain), a likeable individual and truly popular. There were also Creery and Mainguy (now rear admirals) to guide and chastise us, and I think they made a good job of both.

OF THE OLD SCHOOL

One cannot think of the naval college without remembering its outstanding commanding officer, Commander E. A. E. Nixon, R.N. He was a strict disciplinarian of the old school, under whose eagle eye we shivered and moved "at the double." As junior cadets, this moving at the double was a rule for us which applied everywhere, except on our occasional "short leaves" into the city.

As a hardening up process we were made to walk around Bedford Basin, a distance of some 18 miles. The first ones into Bedford got tea with Commander Nixon. Some few pikers were sighted riding the last few miles on the cowcatcher of a train, but were bowled out when they returned well in advance of the tired mob.

I remember once some 10 of us had our leave stopped for a whole week for failing to observe our commander on the far side of a square in the north end of the town. He must have been 200 yards away, but we were still expected to salute him. Another cadet waved to his father, who happened to be a general, and he got confined for quite a time.

BEGINNING TASKS

Our initiation was a normal one I suppose, and consisted of the usual dozen with a cane, running the gauntlet and driving off a 10 foot wharf into a mass of jellyfish. Some didn't enjoy the latter one.

When we "fell in" for divisions or "quarters" we were really inspected, and a favorite trick of our august captain was to flick out your tie to see if there was a tie clip on the end holding it down. If not, you had to buy six new ones out of your 75-cent weekly allowance.

Cadet Grant (now vice-admiral and chief of naval staff) showed his keen sense of humour one day by clipping on the whole six that he had had to buy the week before, without attaching any of them to his shirt. I don't remember that Jimmy Nixon smiled when he ordered the usual six more clips to be bought since the tie wasn't fastened.

The practical work in the engineering shops was a relaxation, and many were the old gags pulled on the raw recruits. It ws quite usual to be sent to Bert Blight in the engineering stores for a "leather headed hammer," or to Tubby Adams, the blacksmith, whose leather belt supported his stomach, for a "bucketful of wind." You had to go suitably armed with a pail for this last one.

ACCIDENTS OCCUR

"Skylarking" around one day, putting grease on each other in these engineering shops, Holms, Richardson and myself were having a lot of fun avoiding the eye of Mr. Kelly, our instructor, a tubby little man who could have passed for a double of Sir Francis Drake. "Rich" saw some particularly black grease in the cog wheels of an enormous slotting machine and put his hand in to get it. We switched off the machine and Mr. Kelly flung himself onto the flywheel, but Rich had two fingers of his right hand missing when he was extricated. Other minor accidents occurred, but that will do for the time being.

Until our uniforms were made by Kirkwood, the tailor on Sackville Street, we were not allowed "ashore," as going out of the dockyard was called, but after we had donned it and admired ourselves self-consciously, a new field was open to us and we could visit friends in the city of Halifax, if invited, or go to a movie, if we had the money, or just walk, which is mostly what we did, for want of the latter commodity.

SUNDAY ROUTINE

On Sundays, a usual routine was a stroll around unspoilt Point Pleasant Park at the south end, or a climb up to the Citadel overlooking the old town clock and the whole harbor before going to tea with some of the many kind people who had made us welcome. Usually these families had daughters. Two of our favorite places were the Green Lantern, and in 1917, the Tally Ho; both were cafes on Barrington Street and you could have your ice cream and listen to an orchestra, whilst keeping a weather eye open for one of the daughters just mentioned.
